Girl Guides Are Preparing Post-War Plans

By DENISE DALTRIFF

Canadian Press Staff Writer LONDON, Dec. 7.—(CP)—Within 48 hours of the signing of Armistice at the end of the war, Girl Guides will be ready to play their part to relieve the misery and starvation imposed during the struggle on occupied countries.

The girls will be among the first to go to Europe and now are being given emergency training in Britain. It was learned at Guide Headquarters in London. Their work will be undertaken as part of an international plan to help the suffering people of Axis-oppressed lands.

Their training covers the decontamination of water, the nutrition of starving people, and cooking for large numbers. The Guides are also taught a little of the history and background of the countries to which they will go to make it easier for them to understand the ways and national customs. The Guides will be concerned chiefly with the children's welfare. They will set up depots for orphaned children and will give first aid to the sick and wounded.

The British and United States Governments have asked voluntary organizations such as the Girl Guides, to co-operate with them in their post-war efforts in Europe and have named Poland, Yugoslavia and Greece as countries to which relief parties will be sent before they leave the Girl Guides, who must be over 21 years of age, will have acquired at least a smattering of the language of the country to which they are going.

To fit them more for the life they will lead the girls take long walks over hard country and attend week-end camps during the week-end camps they carry with them the minimum amount of equipment, as when the actual day arrives they will have to travel in Europe. Other camps will also be arranged which the girls will run themselves. They will also do their own cooking and serve the food to the women of the country to which the girls are assigned. She will teach them how to prepare and cook food in the way to which her people are accustomed.

At these camps they will be continuously confronted with the needs of the people of Europe. They will also be arranged which the girls will run themselves. They will also do their own cooking and serve the food to the women of the country to which the girls are assigned. She will teach them how to prepare and cook food in the way to which her people are accustomed.

Hospitals Hit Hard

Maintenance of civilian hospital service under wartime conditions has become a difficult problem, chiefly through loss of staff but also through curtailment in supplies or equipment, according to Dr. George Stephen, president of the Canadian Hospital Association, who is superintendent of the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal. After visiting western Canada and the United States, Dr. Stephen said that the hospitals of both countries had the same problems, overcrowding of patients and decreasing facilities for carrying on service.

He had found that, with few exceptions, Canadian hospitals were carrying war loads with reduced staffs not only in numbers but also in experience. Hospitals have not been classed as an essential service but have to compete with government or industrial enterprises, which cannot be done. Dr. Stephen hoped that new selective service regulations would tend to stabilize the hospital staffs, but if this failed, he said, "there will, of necessity, be a reduction in the number of patients who can be cared for, and this means refusing some in need. The curtailment of supplies has begun and will be increasingly severe until the war is over. Much of the kitchen, laundry, operating room and laboratory equipment cannot now be bought. This means reduction of service to what is really essential. The public, says an exchange, will be keenly interested in this whole situation because of the extreme importance of hospital service being available to those who need it. It may be impossible to do anything about the shortage of hospital supplies and equipment but it should be possible to do something about the maintenance of hospital staffs. Selective service should give attention to this great need. The hospitals provide such an essential service that they should be assisted to secure and retain employees up to their reasonable minimum requirements.
