Canadian Postage Stamps Due For Change, Is Belief

OTTAWA, Jan. 4 — (CP) — Canadian postage stamps, renowned and prized throughout the philatelic world for their color, beauty and exacting design, are due for a change to a peacetime motif which predominated during the war.

A new issue to replace the current set, which depicts ram tanks, corvettes and other Canadian-produced war weapons among the higher values, has been predicted for some time and today informed sources confirmed that Postmaster-General Bertrand will make announcement of a new set of stamps shortly.

Issuance of the new stamps may be accompanied by announcement of a reduction in the domestic letter rate from four to three cents to eliminate the war-induced increase of one cent. This reduction was forecast by Mr. Bertrand during the last session of Parliament but, as the increase was instituted for taxation purposes, the change may not be announced until the budget is brought down in the House this spring.

The new issue may find the King switching his mode of dress for postal purposes to civilian clothing. The five lower values of the current set—one to five cents—depict him in various service uniforms but the new stamps may show a return to the pre-war custom of picturing the Sovereign in civvies.

One stamp of the new issue might possibly be devoted to a commemoration of Canada's part in the war or, alternatively, the Government could release as a separate issue a single commemorative stamp for fairly short sale for the event.

There probably will be no change in the illustrations of the present seven-cent airmail stamp, showing an airfield, the 10-cent special delivery, which bears the Canadian coat of arms or the 17-cent airmail special delivery, which depicts an airmail plane in flight.

Production of a new issue of stamps is a long and intricate task due to the close study necessarily devoted to selecting illustrations, always produced by outstanding artists, and the delicate job which follows of engraving master dies from which plates for the printing of the new stamps must be made.

Controls Removed From Tire Sales

OTTAWA, Jan. 4 — (CP) — Distribution controls on rubber tires, tubes and all synthetic rubber, except a type known as butyl GR-1, have been removed, the Prices Board announced tonight.

Removal of the distribution controls followed the end of the rationing Jan. 1, but the Board warned that price controls on tires continue and increased pressure on new and used tire price enforcement may be expected within the next few months to stem any tendency towards exorbitant prices and "under-the-counter" sales.

The Board simultaneously announced the removal of distribution controls on specialty cleaning and washing compounds, phosphoric acids, all non-ferrous metals excepting tin, tin bearing alloys, radium and uranium, light bulbs and alcoholic beverages.

Previously these articles were on a list of goods for which suppliers were allowed to distribute only 20 per cent freely and the remaining 80 per cent had to go to customers who were supplied in 1931.

Under the new relaxation added to the list allowing 20 per cent free distribution are bathroom fixtures, such as towel bars and tooth brush holders; broom corn and soft drinks.

Says Gen. Homma Gave Death March Order

MANILA, Jan. 4 — (AP) — A Japanese officer who saw the death march on Bataan testified at the war crimes trial of Lt.-Gen. Masaharu Homma today that Homma himself gave the order for the ordeal in which thousands of American and Filipino prisoners of war died.

The witness, Lt.-Col. Michio Kitayama, a communications officer at Homma's 14th Army Headquarters, said neither the General nor his staff cared what happened to the emaciated men, many of whom were bayoneted or clubbed to death when they fell exhausted along the route.

Kitayama explained that this indifference to the fate of prisoners "prevailed all through the (Japanese) Army," and was due in part to the Japanese belief that surrender is a shameful act and captives therefore should expect to be handled roughly.

Kitayama, who was with Homma throughout the Philippines campaign, also testified that he understood the General had received word from Tokyo that Manila had been declared an open city by the Americans — but not until Dec. 30, 1941, three days after bombers under Homma's orders had dropped their loads on civilian targets there.

THE KIRK PULPIT

Preaching yesterday morning in the Kirk on the subject "The Urgency of Ethical as well as Economic Reconversion", the Minister, the Rev. T.H.B. Somers, said: Economic reconversion is mainly a matter of large scale governmental and industrial arrangement, but ethical reconversion is intimate, private, individual. It all depends on enough persons, who, one by one, deep within themselves come through this world catastrophe with their central faiths and their ethical standards intact. What we are saying then gets down to a personal appeal to you, and you, and you, and me. This coming decade after the most awful war in history is going to be ethically dreadful. Let us not fool ourselves about that, it is bound to be ethically dreadful, with the appeal coming to each of us as Christians: Don't be one more liability, your ethical standards all shot to pieces and your life going loose! Come help us in our ethical reconversion to decency, and honesty, and integrity, and goodwill again.

Alike, the difficulty and the necessity of ethical reconversion spring from another fact, that in war our trust is put preeminently in physical force, in the "weapons of the flesh", as St. Paul said, rather than in the persuasions of the spirit. For years now mankind has looked for victory and deliverance to battleships, machine guns, flame throwers and bombs. And now, God helping us we face the deep need of reconversion to some Christian confidence in spiritual forces, in education and persuasion, in the efficacy of goodwill, in the power of Christian faith and life to transform men and nations. That reconversion is going to be a job.

Long ago, outside Jerusalem, a man hung on a cross—so far as outward eye could see, a pitiable failure if ever there was one, with nothing to count on except the appeal of his life and character, his divine love and sacrifice. Nothing to count on but that! Yet, there on Calvary the supreme miracle of history took place. For that so fragile appeal of the spirit has turned out to be tremendous, incredibly transforming, obdurate as granite in its endurance and, in its conquest of mankind's noblest souls, powerful beyond belief. Long since, Rome fell, and many an empire founded upon force and greed has tumbled down but the influence of that life and character and sacrifice goes on. Believe it or not, it is there in the realm of spiritual forces that we find what lasts and triumphs in the end. The victories of physical force, however noisy and ostentatious, and however necessary we may think them, are temporary; only the victories of the spirit that inwardly persuade men and transform them last. And now we Christians are supposed to believe in this power of the spiritual forces, as S. Paul said, "divinely strong to demolish fortresses."

CENTRAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Services on the Lord's day in Central Christian Church were under the direction of the minister, Rev. M.D. Dunbar. Music was in charge of the organist, Mrs. Milton Stewart.

Taking for his morning message: "When Loss Becomes Profit" the minister based his words upon two particular passages of scripture: one associated with the letter to the Philippians while the other was a portion from the Gospel according to St. John. The Apostle Paul in the Philippian letter states "Howbeit what things were gain to me, these have I counted loss for Christ. Yea verily, and I count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord..."

It is when we forfeit the things which would be gain to us to find the righteousness which is in Christ that "loss becomes profitable." Again Paul speaks words of truth when he says, "what doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world but forfeit his own soul." To that man a loss would become a profit.

The man born blind having been healed by Christ made confession of him before the Pharisees by saying, "If this man were not from God, he could do nothing." Upon hearing these words the man was cast out. This man lost the world but found Christ. Closing his message the minister appealed to the congregation to consider the tremendous cost of Discipleship. It is exacting, it is costly, but it is the proven path to God. To become His follower, "let a man deny himself, take up his cross and follow me."

Taking for his evening message: "Liers-in-wait" Mr. Dunbar, based his words upon Judges 16:9 "Now she had Liers-in-wait abiding in the chamber." The message was an appeal to guard oneself against the little sins that do so often beset us.

Congress Party Wins In Indian Election

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4 — (CP) —The Government of India information services said today that final results in the voting for the central Legislative assembly in India gave the congress party 56 of 102 elected seats.

Other results were as follows: Moslem League 30 seats; Akalis (Sikhs) 2; Independents (European) 8; Independents (Indian) 6.

Total membership of the Legislative Assembly is 141. The remaining 39 seats consist of officials and others nominated by the Government of India.

The Congress Party had 36 members in the 1945 assembly and the Moslem League had 25. There was no Akali member. There were 10 Nationalists in 1945 but no candidate was elected under that banner this time.

Independent Indians showed a marked drop from 21 in the old assembly. The figure for independent Europeans was unchanged.

Prime Minister Attlee and the Viceroy, Viscount Wavell, have announced that a constituent assembly will be asked to draw up plans for a new constitution for India, once the central election and the provincial elections to be held later this winter are concluded.

HELEN TOPPING MILLER

He ripped the sheets out one after ranother, counted words mechanically. The stuff was good. He grinned at himself in the mirror, smacked back his unruly hair, went out. The envelope went into a mail box. Mike did not look at his watch. Time, as time, did not exist for Mike Paull.

But Teresa Harrison looked at the clock reproachfully when he came banging at her door. She held a limp robe around her long legs and, barren of make-up her face looked old and bleak.

"Mike, you abomination! It's half-past four in the morning."

"Is it?" Mike strolled in, smelled the stale, lingering odor of cigarettes, the sweeet, greasy fragrance of Theresa's cold cream. "Why don't you empty your ash trays? This place is a shambles."

"Get out of here!" ordered Teresa. "I'm dead. Those dreadful people never left till after two o'clock. And I'm a working woman. I have to be at my office at nine."

"I'm a working man, too. Just got through working. Sit down, Teresa. I want to talk. About Ginny Warfield."

Teresa's face hardened. "Mike you let Virginia alone. I need her. I've got a lot of money and time invested in her. I won't have her upset."

"I'm not going to upset her." He straddled a gilt chair coolly, grinned his engaging grin. "I'm going to marry her. Took me all night to make up my mind."

"That," snapped Teresa, "is the wildest thing you've said yet."

"It's the sanest thing I ever said in all my life. After uttering millions of words, all more or less crazy. I speak a piece of common sense, and you fly off the handle."

"I won't let Virginia marry you. I'm fond of the girl. I took her up—off a park bench, practically. There she was, struggling to live on a starvation Government job, too proud to write home, eating sandwiches in a drug store, getting a panic over a run in a stocking. And I took her in."

"Has she got a home?"

"Good heavens! You want to marry her and you know nothing about the girl at all."

"I know she's the only girl I ever wanted to marry. The rest is unimportant."

"And does she want to marry you?"

"She says she doesn't. She'll change her mind."

"She has a little sense, then."

"You don't think much of me, do you? But I'm going to marry Ginny, all the same."

"I tell her I won't let her marry you, Mike Paull! What do you know about Virginia, except that her hair is pretty and that she has a sort of aloof charm? Do you know that her mother died when she was born? That her father's a hard-working country doctor down in Tennessee, with a second wife and a young, hungry family?"

"Stepmother—is that why Ginny left home?"

"I think not. I think she adores the woman. But you know how country doctors get along. Do ten thousand dollars' worth of work in a year, charge off half of it to charity, collect about three thousand, and half of that in wood, or potatoes, or something. Virginia was independent. She had an uncle in Congress—he was defeated soon after she came here, but he got her a small job and she wanted to stand on her own feet. And now she's on the way to being a good business woman. Let her alone Mike—don't make her unhappy."

Teresa, I'm not going to make her unhappy. I'm not going to interfere with her life. I'm free—she'll be free."

"You," said Teresa, disgustedly, "are the most adolescent person I've ever known. Don't you know anything about the world at all? Don't you know that a woman in love—or a man either if he's worth shooting at sunrise—can't be free?"

"Ginny said that," Mike said absently.

"Did she? Then she's a wise woman—and you," Teresa's eyes grew stony and impatient, "are an irresponsible young fool! You've never considered any one else in your life. You don't know how. You'd go galloping blithely off to some outlandish place; maybe you'd remember to say good-by, and more than likely you wouldn't. You'd forget to write—she wouldn't know where you were half the time. Women can't endure that sort of thing. If you knew how to be considerate, you wouldn't have come crashing in her dragging me out into the chilly dawn to listen to your maundering!"

"Teresa, my angel—" Mike got up and searched the cigarette boxes. "They're all gone, probably. Wait—here's a lone one. Now what were you going to say? Say it and get out."

Test Plan to Speed Olive Tree Growth

SYDNEY, Australia, Jan 4 — (CP)—Olive trees do well in Australia but in the past they have grown too slowly for the Australian orchardist to bother much about them. In 1939 Australia produced 18,000 gallons of olive oil, almost all in South Australia, and imported 360,000 gallons from Spain, Italy and France.

Now George Warner, a plant-breeder of Pasadena, California, is applying in Australia a formula which is said to have produced in California olive-bearing trees 14 feet high from year-old slips within three years. Warner is working with Harold Drake of Sydney who is setting out 30,000 olive trees on 500 acres at Robinvale on the Murray River in Victoria.

The Commonwealth Department of Agriculture has sponsored Warner's visit to Australia. It is hoped that Australia may grow all her own olives and make her own olive oil within five years.
