Happenings of The Week

Princess Elizabeth, who is suffering from a slight chill, has shown "signs of improvement," Buckingham Palace sources said Thursday. The Princess was visited by Sir John Weir, the King's physician, who saw her twice Thursday. He was reported to have ordered her to remain in her room at the Palace. Palace sources said it was unlikely the Princess would attend the races at Epsom Downs.

Princess Margaret spent more than an hour visiting the former royal palace of Versailles. She wandered through the galleries and corridors and then walked in the palace park where the most famous fountains in the world were playing in her honor. She also visited the Trinquets, miniature palaces where kings and queens of France held their banquets. After lunching in the garden of a restaurant at Bougival the princess drove back to the British embassy for a quick change of costume. She then drove to the salon of the fashionable dressmaker, Jean Dessès, near the Champs, Elysees to watch a fashion show.

Hobbies Of Local Citizens

By Uncle Joe

Three generations of the Jewell family have occupied the old homestead situated on the Jewell Road, North Ave. William Jewell, the original pioneer, came out from England about 120 years ago and settled the tract of land now occupied by his youngest grandson. Gradually the holdings became cultivated fields that yielded some of the best crops ever raised in this section of the province.

But William Jewell had a flair for gardening and in his well-tended garden, surrounded by nicely clipped hedges, could be seen grapevines, artichokes, melons, white and red raspberries, strawberries and about everything a good gardener could wish for. When his son John took over after the old man's death, the gardens were allowed to run out; the plans were uprooted and other crops put in. John Jewell's farming methods differed entirely from those of his father in that he believed in growing only rotation crops. With more and more of the forest land brought under cultivation, he had little time to bother with the elaborate gardens.

Today the grandson of William Jewell farms the old homestead as a different kind of farmer from his grandfather. For instance, the long fields of barley and rye have given place to lush meadows and pasture lands where you may see a fine line of dairy cattle grazing beside the beef type.

This young farmer's hobby is beef cattle. He has been raising them now for a number of years with marked success. The eight milking cows in his herd bring in a monthly pay-check that keeps him and his family in ready cash as well as buying the needed groceries. With beef at its present level he is assured of a better than average living for himself and his family. Raising beef cattle also has enabled him to buy up-to-date farm machinery, plus giving the entire family many modern conveniences undreamed of in his grandfather's day.

David Jewell grows only enough turnips for the use of his live stock, and just sufficient potatoes for the family larder.

The idea of buying large quantities of commercial fertilizer and growing great fields of roots does not appeal to him. "It's like putting all your eggs into one nest," he told me. "If you strike me down, I'm pot your O.K.; otherwise, all your labor has been in vain, and the only ones to gain from the venture are the big fertilizer companies."

That's how this young farmer views the present trend in agriculture in this province, and as far as he's concerned his hobby of producing beef will be carried on as long as present prices prevail.

And when lean years come again, he will be no worse off than other farmers who have gone in for beef and perhaps much better off than the farmer who has gambled everything on potatoes.

But to be a successful beef farmer one must have a liking for animals. In other words, it becomes a hobby; and, like all paying hobbies, it pays off according to the efforts put into it.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Matthew, Souris, and their daughter, Miss Miriam Matthew of Charlottetown are planning a month's holiday in the United Kingdom and the continent. They will leave on Monday aboard the Aquitania for England. They will visit in Holland for several weeks and before returning home will spend some time touring in Scotland.

Mrs. Harry Cudmore entertained at her home on Thursday afternoon in honour of Dr. Muriel Uppitichard of Dominion Red Cross Headquarters. The tea table was decorated with spring flowers. Mrs. E. M. Bagnall poured tea and those helping serve were Mrs. Roy Cudmore, Miss Lillian Duchemin, and Mrs. James Montgomery.

Friends of Mrs. Alan Love (nee Eleanor Gaudet) of Halifax, N. S., will be interested to learn that she will be sailing with her husband on the "Aquitania," Monday for England on a visit to Mr. Love's parents, while in England, they will also visit Squadron Leader and Mrs. G. A. Huxford, Thornbury Island. Mrs. Huxford is the former Gags Gaudet of Charlottetown.

Miss Edith MacPherson, Brookline, Mass., is the guest of her mother, Mrs. Thomas MacPherson, Cumberland Street.

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Secretive Husband

Mistrustful Man Won't Tell Wife How He Stands Financially

DEAR MISS DIX: Wouldn't a man be a sucker to tell a woman how much money he makes and how much he has in the bank? I have been married twice. My first wife took all of my money and ran around with another man. She even bought him a car with my money. I do not approve of a man letting his wife know how much money he makes until they have been married several years. By that time he will have found out if she is honest and can be trusted.

I have never told my second wife how I stand financially, for I don't trust any woman with my secrets. A wife asking her husband questions about his business will break up a love affair, because it makes the husband wonder if she is just a gold-digger. There are many angles to the husband's side of the money problem.

ANSWER: I don't think a man is a sucker to make a confidante of his wife. I think he is a sucker to marry a woman who has so little brains and so little honor and honesty that he can't trust her to play fair with him. Undeniably there are women who are petty thieves who go through their husbands' pockets at night, who pad the grocery bills and even rob the baby's piggy bank to get money for their own devices.

Maybe the reason that so many wives have no shame in having to panhandle their husbands for every penny and being compelled to tell what they did with that quarter that they were given week before last. Of course, in the end a man's family does get most of what he earns, but a lot of wives have to sweat blood to get it.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: Do you think it possible for a girl to fall truly in love with a man who is twice her age? The girl is settled in her ways and has never cared for young men. The man is a widower

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

Today, James and his namesake, Jamie, spent a pleasant morning in the fall fields at the other farm. At supper this evening which came as a prelude to Jamie's homing, when he chanced to mention his aching muscles, James chuckled: "That will soon wear away!" And he commented to me, "You've no idea, Ellen, the help he was to me at the work. Indeed I should have done badly without him. If I had him," he smiled and reached over to pat the lad's shoulder, "I believe I could make quite a farmer out of him!"

And secretly, we were very well pleased that the distance which lies between Alderley and Rob's will see to it that no trivial excuse will interfere with any one of Jamie's school days. Not that I have ever kept Jamie on the farm, but only if inclined to it by an enjoyment of the life and a sustaining love for the land he must till.

The insistence of this chore in which they engaged, had been lying heavily on James' mind in recent days. Whenever he stopped to enumerate the many duties in the immediate future, it was to add: "Now, that's something else we must attend to before the sowing." So it was that this morning when the younger farmer must make a trip to town in the interest of repairing the manure spreader, James seized the opportunity afforded by the suspension of the field work here and was soon on his way to the other farm.

One felt that as he waded in the yard, from a bend in the lane it was with no thought of the tedious chore before him, but only a fine anticipation that carried him behind "our own mare" in the farm-cart, off to the other farm. "And, Ellen," James had called, "don't forget to keep an eye to things." The swallows on the back verandah were busy at their household; the robin-bird, a gay and ir-re-sistible lad-of-a-fellow trilled from the top of the white birch; the white birch; crow-call echoed from the woodlands and everywhere the day was fresh and new.

Gathering stones, the two workers were, of a crop of them which had appeared during the cultivating in those distant fields. We are pleased to hear that James would be actually distressed if he had to farm between or around boulders which is the lot of many a farmer and gardener in other less arable places than those we find in this Island Province of ours. One day of last week, Mr. C. from the house on the hill was at a similar undertaking though at the time his actions were puzzling to Jamie and me. "He must have had a loss," we concluded, "he's digging—it is in the grave there in the middle of his plowed field!" It was evidently a difficult task, because he and his helper worked at it busily for some time. It was James (Continued on Page 9)

Vegetable crops which spread, such as cucumbers, melons, winter squashes and pumpkins, should be planted where they will not over-run smaller crops.

For softening water for laundry, use 4 ounces of alcohol to 1/2 ounce of ammonia. If for toilet use, add one dram of oil of lavender.

Brushes made of pure hog bristles are almost worth their weight in gold these days. Due to continuing chaos in China, they are hard to obtain.

Daily recreation has come to be an essential for health and happiness. Whenever anyone discovers recreational activities that really satisfy, fatigue vanishes like a desert mirage. Recreation is anything you choose to do in your leisure time that gives you refreshment of mind, body and spirit.

It is not too late to transplant perennials. Take them up with plenty of soil and keep them well watered.

That Body Of Yours

James W. Barton, M. D.

There is so much emotional disturbance present throughout the world that the barbital drugs, which in the past have been used in place of morphine. Unfortunately, just as some are allergic to pollen, food, furs and dust, there are others who acquire the barbital or barbiturate habit with serious results.

Physicians are finding that in addition to controlling and preventing attacks of epilepsy, barbital is of great help in quieting the patient about to undergo an operation, so that the amount of the anesthetic needed is much less and there is less nausea after the operation. It may come as a surprise, however, to learn that an operation can be performed without the usual general anesthetic.

In "Philippine Medical Association Journal," Dr. F. C. Guzman and O. J. Reyes say that a short-acting barbiturate (seconal sodium) and narcotic (morphine), together with local injections into tissues have been found to render patients such short-acting operations as appendicitis, where the surgeon "chooses" the cases in which to use this method of treatment. This method of relieving pain during operation was used in 890 appendectomies, including 285 acute cases, and it was found successful in all but 4 cases.

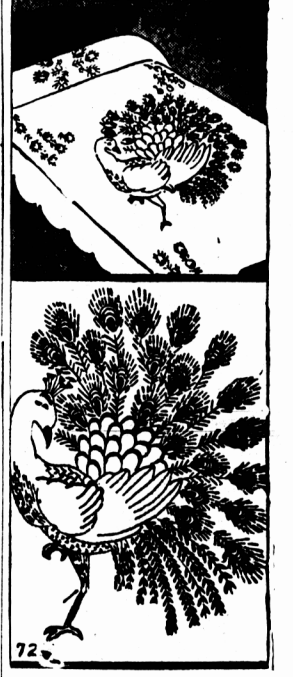

The second sodium (3 grains) is given one hour before the operation and morphine (1/4 grain) 30 minutes before the operation. It has been observed that with this method the patients are brought to the operating room, operated on (Continued on Page 9)
