

TODAY IS THE DAY

PRINCE EDWARD

AND TOMORROW

GERALDINE FARRAR IN "JOAN THE WOMAN"

In the dark ages, when the fate of France hung by a mere thread, a girl rose from the people and saved the nation from obliteration. Soldiers in the trenches today, fighting to preserve for themselves the future what Joan of Arc gave them, declare her figure hovers over them on the field of battle; her spirit leads them to deeds of greatness.

OPEN LETTER TO MR. DOULL

By a Soldier's Wife.

Mr. Doull, Sir,—In answer to your letter in the Island Patriot of last night let me say a few words in behalf of the wives and mothers of Husbands and Sons at the Front or in England at present, also in behalf of those of the family at home.

In the first place, Mr. Doull says if the Government of Canada want 100,000 men to fight in France and Flanders let them Conscript the 100,000 men in England.

That's all very well, but the 100,000 men in England now did not have to be conscripted. They knew what their duty was to their Country and they have got as far as England and I don't think it will be necessary to Conscript them to go to France. They are ready to go any moment they are needed and the men who manage Military Affairs in France and Flanders know more about when they need these than we in Canada do or Mr. Doull does, and I don't think they want them sent over. The Boys are only too willing to go.

It is no fun to be in England training. Most men would rather be at the Front, training for long hours under all kinds of weather and conditions. Our "Soldiers" Friend Mr. Doull evidently thinks it's a joke; perhaps he'd like to try it himself and see how he'd like it. I am sure if he is so gifted other ways as he is with his tongue, he'd make a good soldier of the King—Kaiser, I meant to say. He's not too old to fight yet so let's give him a chance and we will see if he'll go as willing as some of the boys who are in England at present.

He goes on farther to say at least by going to England they have got a clear of the responsibilities and work at home. Does he mean to say they gave up their homes and families for $1.10 a day? It certainly was some entertainment.

They and their families have been fed at the country's expense! Well, I am sorry for Mr. Doull to make such a mean remark. It is too bad the Kaiser wouldn't have to feed us! And our husbands and sons shedding their blood every day for the life of old Fogerty at home like Walter P. Doull.

Talk is cheap, but its money and soldiers we want, if we are going to win the war. We want men to take the place of those who have made the Supreme Sacrifice as so many of our boys have in the past few months.

Mr. Doull says conscript the titles and if that is not sufficient conscript the Khaki and let them go back to work. How proud we'd be to see them back without the khaki, and any day they are ready to do this we will be overjoyed to see them for the simple reason that many of us with families are wishing they were back home at their old positions, as we can hardly live on the small salary. Mr. Doull consoles the soldiers' families here.

Now if you will pardon me for taking up your time and thanking you for your space, I'll close with all good wishes to Mr. Doull for the coming election. Best Luck to Mr. Borden and Conscript it's the only thing that's going to take the Khaki off our boys and send them home, by sending reinforcements to our boys at the front and in England.

I am Sir, etc., S.W. P.S.—I think he is Pro-German, don't you? He seems to think the Kaiser got a great hold on to Belgium, almost as much as his Party has on the coming Election.

CURRIE'S TRIBUTE TO HIS SOLDIERS

PARIS, Nov. 26.—(Reuter Despatch).—The newspaper Excelsior publishes an interview with Lieut-General Sir Arthur Currie, commander of the Canadian Army Corps, who paid the highest tribute to his men. In the course of the interview General Currie said: "It is the mixture of the two races which gives us such fine soldiers. They have got the dash and irresistible dash of the French and the tenacity of the Anglo-Saxon. It is 'Tulia Francesca' coupled with bulldog grit. When my boys have got their teeth in they do not leave go."

General Currie recalled with legitimate pride that the Canadian army did not know what defeat was. From its first appearance on the battlefield to its recent capture of Passchendaele Ridge fortune had always rested on its valor. "That is one of the reasons of the army's morale," said General Currie. "An army that has never known defeat can be led to the end of the world. But there are other reasons for the army's fine, sturdy spirit. They are fighting with full consciousness of the justice of their cause. These 450,000 volunteers did not join up, and leave the comfort of their homes in order to hurl themselves into a war of conquest and lust. They have resolutely descended into the furnace of war in order to defend the cradle of their common ancestors and the civilization handed down by past generations. And they will not give up until the fire is quenched."

General Currie spoke in glowing terms of the officers under his command and of the French army, which he had watched in action. Asked when the war would end he replied: "When there are no more Boches."

LAUDER LECTURES FRENCH-CANADIANS.

MONTREAL, Nov. 27.—Addressing the Rotary Club, Harry Lauder, the comedian, said that if the French of Quebec refused to fight, they were not of the same blood as the people of France, but of bastard blood.

Mr. Lauder said that he had noticed that the French of Quebec were a wee bit slow in joining the colors. He advised his audience not to let their religion interfere with liberty, because if they did they would be always fighting. The Frenchmen of Quebec, he said, were not asked to fight for France, but for themselves. He saw a wee bit hill near Vimy Ridge where 10,000 Frenchmen died. Quebec was a big country, but how many of her people had so died? The French of Quebec might think the old country Frenchman was an infidel. If he was he was the best man the world ever knew, and they were all following him because of his great qualities. Any man who would not use today and go to the front was not natural. He must be a dreamer or schemer. Dreams and schemes would not save them today.

SOLDIER'S WIFE.

P.S.—I think he is Pro-German, don't you? He seems to think the Kaiser got a great hold on to Belgium, almost as much as his Party has on the coming Election.

GETS TWO YEARS FOR FAILING TO REGISTER

PORT ARTHUR, Ont. Nov. 26.—Two year's imprisonment was the sentence imposed by Magistrate Doble upon Alphonse McGregor, the first man arrested for failure to register under the Military Service Act. After being arrested, McGregor was given every opportunity to report to the military authorities, but refused, and when sentenced made an impassioned address to the court, declaring the whole thing, including the Military Service Act, illegal.

ROYAL JEWELS.

European Monarchs Disposing of Valuables in Hard Times.

In times of stress the English workers deposit what Mr. Wennmick called their "portable property" at the pawnshop, and the French at the state establishment more euphemistically called the mont-de-piété. Royalty cannot descend to these shifts, although some of the crowned heads of Europe, through pressure of hard times since the beginning of the war, have had to dispose of their jewels. The Czarina of Russia took time by the forelock by selling hers before the war began. Now the King of Bavaria has sold in Holland pearls to the value of half a million sterling. Doubtless these are the famous black pearls of his family, which, according to tradition, bring misfortune to their owners.—Tit-Bits.

SPOILT IN THE TELLING.

A Britisher was on a visit to Niagara, and he sought information from a fruit grower as follows: "John, what do you do with all the peaches that you grow here?" "Peaches! Why, don't you know? We eat all we can and what we can't we can." The Britisher laughed long and loud, and saved up the story to retell to his friends when he got back home. But this, according to General Pershing, is how he told it: "Peaches! Why, don't you know? We eat 'em all we can and what we can't we—tin."
