How to Choose a Domestic-Minded Husband Gives Certain Signs That Point the Way Dorothy Dix

If a Man Likes His Surroundings to be Beautiful, if He Likes to Talk and Read, and Especially to Eat, a Woman Can be Reasonably Sure That He Will be the Domestic Type of Husband

A woman wants to know how she can tell on the safe side of the altar whether a man is domestic-minded, as the psychologists would say, or not. She says that she adored her home and did everything to make it beautiful and comfortable and attractive, but her husband took no interest in it. Never bought anything for it or noticed the rugs or chairs or anything. And she couldn't keep him in it. He used it merely as a parking place in between his philandering. Consequently, she gave him the air and shut the door gently but firmly behind him.

Now she wants to marry again, mainly in order to have a home and that necessitates having a husband, for a home without a man in it is as flat and tasteless as an egg without salt. But this time she wants to be sure of getting a housebroken husband who will be a fireside companion and regard his home as something more than a place in which to change his clothes and to come back to after the night clubs have shut up.

And she wants to know how she can tell whether a bachelor belongs to the species that can be tamed and taught to eat out of his wife's hand or whether he is one of the kind that will always revert to the wild as soon as the honeymoon is over and that no matrimonial bars will hold.

Alas, dear lady, this is a hard question to answer, for when it comes to prophesying beforehand what sort of husband a man will make, all signs fail. There are no infallible earmarks that show whether a man will be a roamer or a stay-at-home, whether he will be faithful or a skirt-chaser; whether he will be generous or a tightwad; whether he will be gallant and tender, or make one of the husbands who will consider that it is not worth while to show even common courtesy and politeness to a mere wife.

A woman cannot, for example, even tell whether she is getting a perfect lover or a human icicle when she marries. During the days of courtship the man will exhibit every identification of impassioned devotion. He will hang about her until he positively has to be thrown out of the house. He will swear that he cannot live without her and have fits of jealousy if she so much as looks at another man. He will feed her on soft talk and flatteries and cajoleries. He will load her down with gifts and inundate her with letters and telegrams if he has to be separated from her.

Naturally, the poor girl thinks that here is a safe bet, if there ever was one, and she marries the man feeling sure that she is going to feast upon sugar plums the balance of her life. But, to her amazement, her ardent lover cools off after marriage and his temperature goes down from fever heat to subnormal. He never mentions the state of his affection to her again. He never notices how she looks or what she wears or pays her a compliment, and when he gives her a kiss it is so cold and flabby it is an insult instead of a caress.

Maybe he still loves her. Probably he does and still thinks her the greatest woman in the world, but she has to be a mind-reader to find it out.

Nor can a woman tell before marriage whether a man will make a generous husband, or be such a tightwad that she has to use a jimmy to get even the housekeeping money out of him. Before marriage he may have lavished candy and flowers upon her and gratified her every wish and racked his brains to think of new places of amusement to take her.

But after marriage he not only never brings her 10 cents' worth of candy or a wilted rose, or takes her to a movie without a family row, but he apparently begrudges her even the board and keep she earns by doing the work of cook and housemaid and nurse and general utility woman.

Neither can a woman put her faith in the old proverb that a good son makes a good husband, because some of the best sons make the worst husbands on earth. For a man can have the mother complex so badly and be so absorbed in doing his duty by his mother that he sacrifices his wife to his mother and fails to see that he has any duty toward the woman he has married.

Still, and all, however, while for every rule for picking out the kind of husband you want there are a hundred exceptions, there are certain straws which show which way the winds of his temperament blow and, at least, give a woman some indication of what course he is likely to pursue after marriage.

So my advice to the woman who wants a husband who will help her make a happy home is to notice these points in a man:

First. Has he a sense of beauty? Does he love pretty things? Is he sensitive to artistic surroundings? Plenty of good men would just as soon live in a shack as a palace. All they ask of a house is that it be weatherproof. They never notice whether the curtains are clean or dirty and every time their wives buy a new piece of furniture they think it is an unwarranted extravagance. No woman can have any pleasure in making a home for that type of husband.

Then observe whether a man's idea of a pleasant evening is spent in agreeable company or with a good book or in chasing around. If a man does not like to talk or to read and if he has no resources in himself, he will always be a gadder. He will always have to step out to find amusement and you can never nail him to his own fireside.

Finally, if you want a domestic husband, marry one who lives to eat. A dinner or just the things he likes, cooked just the way he likes them, will do more to draw a man homeward of an evening than a sense of duty, and after he has partaken of a full meal it is not the bright lights that attract him, but a good, comfy chair and his slippers and the domestic duct in which he will not have to exert himself to be brilliant or witty or wise.

Never pick out a thin, dyspeptic man or one who has no appetite, or one who doesn't know how to order a meal if you want a husband you can keep at home in the evenings.

And if, in addition, the man is a widower who has had a home and lost it and is sick and tired of restaurants and wandering around, grab him quickly. You have a cinch.

$100.00 In Rewards For True Letters

The Dr. Williams Medicine Co. Offers 28 Cash Prizes to Canadian Mothers

Every year more mothers buy Dr. Williams' Baby's Own Tablets for their children. We know that mothers appreciate these safe, pleasant, laxative tablets which do so much to relieve their children of colds, simple fevers, digestive disturbances and so many other ailments to which all children are subject. We know that Baby's Own Tablets are needed in every home where there are children.

But we would like to know what you, as a mother, think of Baby's Own Tablets. So we are asking you to write us a letter, telling us how Baby's Own Tablets have helped you to keep your children healthy and happy, and why you recommend this time-tested preparation to other mothers.

The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., of Brockville, Ontario, will award a cash prize of $25.00 for the best letter received on or before November 30th, 1931. For the second best letter a prize of $15.00 will be awarded; for the third best letter $10.00, and for the next best 25 letters prizes of $2.00 each will be given.

Your letter, of course, must be strictly true. There is no demand on your imagination. Just tell us all the interesting facts—how Baby's Own Tablets have helped your child—and your letter may win a prize.

Every letter must be signed with the full name and correct address of the person sending it. Fine writing will not win a prize unless you have a good case to describe. The strength of the letter and not the style of the letter will be the basis of the award.

The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., shall have the right to publish any letter entered in this contest whether it wins a prize or not.

The writer of each letter must give the name and date of the paper in which she saw this announcement. The contest will close November 30th, and the prizes will be awarded as soon as possible thereafter.

Do not delay in entering this contest. If your child has been benefited by Baby's Own Tablets, write your letter NOW.

Address all letters as follows:

A Morning Smile

A commercial traveller called on a new customer and handed him a small snapshot of his fiancée in mistake for his business card. "That, sir," he said, "is the firm I represent."

The customer examined the determined-looking feature of the girl and returned the snapshot. "You'll never be the manager of that firm," he said.

SAVED IMPORTED DRESS

"After a little wearing, a lovely green voile—an imported dress—lost color so completely that it was not wearable. A friend who had admired it asked me why I wasn't wearing it any more. On hearing the reason, she advised dyeing it and recommended Diamond Dyes. To make a long story short, it turned out beautifully. I have a lovely new dress that really cost just 15c—the price of one package of Diamond Dyes.

"I have since used Diamond Dyes for both tinting and dyeing. They do either equally well. I am not an expert dyer but I never have a failure with Diamond Dyes. They seem to be made so they always go on smoothly and evenly. They never spot, streak or run; and friends never think the things I dye with Diamond Dyes are redyed at all!"

PLEASANT CIRCLE INSTITUTE

The October meeting of Pleasant Circle Institute was held at the home of Miss Edith Boulter on Oct. 8th. Eleven members and five visitors were present. Meeting opened with singing "It's a Good Time to Get Acquainted." Minutes were read and adopted. A letter was read from the Department of Public Works in regard to a culvert and bridge for school. One new member was welcomed. It was decided not to hold the annual chicken supper and bazaar. Next meeting to be at the home of Mrs. Henry Cameron. Roll Call to be answered by paying annual fee. Meeting closed with "Club Woman's Creed." Lunch was then served by the hostess. Receipts for the evening $2.25.

For The Cook

STUFFED PEANUT POTATOES

Cut 6 baked potatoes in halves lengthwise. Scoop out pulp with a spoon and mash. Add 1 tablespoon butter, salt, pepper and one-half cup milk; beat well, then fold in two whipped egg whites. Refill skins with this mixture, pile lightly, do not smooth, and drop one-half teaspoon of peanut butter on top of each filled potato skin. This will melt and help to brown the top. Return to a hot oven and bake until the potatoes are puffed and brown.

The Vital Concern of Every Mother

GREAT care should be exercised to make sure that children do not outgrow their strength; that they grow normally and regularly, body, mind, and muscle developing at the same rate. Growing children need more nourishment than ordinary food supplies. Give your kiddies Ovaltine. It is delicious and supplies in concentrated, correctly balanced and easily digested form, all the nourishing elements essential for healthy growth. Children enjoy Ovaltine between meals as well as at them. This wonderful food of Nature makes their glass of milk more palatable, more nourishing and much more digestible. Ovaltine builds sturdy bodies, sound nerves and alert minds.
