Canadian Navy In North Africa

By DOUG HOW
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON, July 6.—(CP)—Three thousand men and 29 ships—that, in cold statistics, was the Canadian naval contribution to the conquest of North Africa.

To them on the Mediterranean, the figures credit three sunken enemy submarines, the probable sinking of a fourth, the probable damaging of a fifth. From their tanks, the figures say, fell the Corbieres Loubrieu and Weyburn.

Of these ships, 27 were corvettes and two were destroyers.

Of these men, more than a score won decorations including two D.S.O.'s, three D.S.C.'s, and two D.S.M.'s.

The human story of these sea dogs and their diminutive fighting craft is the story of harsh action on the sea and in the air of shattering convoys, of combating the forces that endangered the line of supply, of the American shock troops on a dubious seacoast.

Canada's navy, as world navies go, is the finest among submarines. Her work is the tedious, unglamorous, but of the utmost importance, of protecting the convoys, of combating the forces that endangered the line of supply, of the American shock troops on a dubious seacoast.

IN MEMORY OF SGT. ALEXANDER COLIN MATHESON

A deep gloom was cast over Glen William and vicinity when word was received of the death of Sgt. Alexander Colin Matheson.

Sgt. Matheson was born in Glen William on May 24th, 1923 and was the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Angus Matheson.

He joined the R.C.A.F. at Charlottetown on Dec. 11th, 1941, then left the following morning for Manning Depot, Toronto.

He was transferred to Summerside in the spring of 1942 where he remained until August when he went to Mont Joli, Quebec for a three months course from which he graduated as Sgt. Air Gunner. He left for overseas on New Year's Day, 1943. After his arrival overseas he had taken advanced course which he completed on May 18th. He met his death on the eve of his twentieth birthday due to enemy action. His funeral was held on Saturday, May 29th at full military honors. Burial took place at North Burwell cemetery, England.

Alexander was a boy of exceptional fine qualities, loved and respected by all who knew him and a great favorite of both old and young. His pleasing manner and kind disposition won for him a host of friends, by whom he will be sadly missed but most of all in the home where his kind and gentle manner was always present.

He leaves to mourn besides his grief-stricken parents, one brother, Callum, and two sisters, Mary and Barbara, all home; also his grandparents, Mrs. Mary MacPhee, Heath, and Mrs. Andrew, all home. His heart-felt sympathy of the community is extended to the bereaved in their great sorrow.
