ISLANDER PASSES AWAY.—The death occurred in the St. Paul's Hospital, Saskatoon, of Mrs. G. E. McFarlane in her 67th year. The late Mrs. McFarlane was born in Souris, P. E. Island and left there with her husband in 1907 for the west and settled in Lanigan, Sask., where she resided until the time of her death. In 1977 she with her husband took over the Lanigan Hotel and through her able management made it one of the best hotels in Saskatchewan. Some time ago she developed pernicious anaemia and entered the hospital where in spite of all medical aid she passed quietly away on Sunday October 31st. The remains were brought to Lanigan and the funeral service held from the United Church of that place on Tuesday afternoon. A large number were present to pay their final respects to a departed citizen. She leaves to mourn her loss a sorrowing husband and one son to whom the Guardian extends sincere sympathy.

"LITTLE GIRL" FROCKS. Mayfair is in the grip of a "little girl" cult. Grown-up society misses are wearing coats and hats which make their friend look twice to see if it is really the grown-up miss or her young sister. The high-waisted little coats look as though their wearers should be out rolling hoops instead of attending dignified social functions.

The new evening frocks reflect the "little girl" influence. One charming frock made of green tulle was seen with a long pleated skirt attached to a little high-waisted bodice and had tiny, puffed sleeves. A small velvet miter for the wrists served the purpose of a

THE JUDGES SENTENCE

Punishment in connection with abduction in the Province of Quebec runs high, says the Toronto Star Weekly. It was with a heavy heart therefore that young Oscar Aube, a railwayman, appeared before Judge Choquette recently on a charge of abducting Rosa Alma Boucher of St. Simon (en bas). He was quite reconciled to bearing himself sentenced to a long term of imprisonment, but he was not quite prepared for the life sentence that was meted out to him.

Oscar Aube is a presentable young man of twenty-eight years, and Rosa Alma Boucher is a pretty little thing of some eighteen summers. They lived in neighboring townships in the vicinity of the famous summer resort, Riviere du Loup, and whenever Oscar's train passed St. Simon, Rose was on the platform to meet her lover; if a meeting was impossible, to wave a kiss in his general direction, as the train rolled by. It is an old saying that love will find a way and despite the vagaries of train schedules, and the opposition of her father, the lovers found many an opportunity to meet.

Soon both of them were literally swept off their feet by the grand passion. But ever the girl's father stood in the offing, barring the way to happiness. Rose was an obedient child and she was averse to lying in the face of her father's wishes, but love tugged hard in the opposite direction, and when one fine day Oscar suggested an elopement she forgot the principle of filial duty under the influence of love.

When Rose failed to return to the house that night her father, Mr. Louis Boucher, a retired farmer, did not ponder long before coming to a conclusion. He had seen the romance blossoming under his very nose. Believing that the lovers had made for Quebec City he communicated with the local police. The case was entrusted to the hands of Detective Masse, who left headquarters determined to locate them.

It so happened that he did not take long for very early in his search of the rooming-house he found trace of them. From the description which the landlady gave of her boarders he was convinced that it was them. They were not at home, however, and he had to wait their return.

In due course the couple arrived. Detective Masse waited in the hall until they were both in the dining room. Then he entered the room, put his hand on Aube's shoulder and told him that he was under arrest. Aube took the matter quietly enough, but Rose Alma broke into tears and protested against the iniquity of the law in interfering with their lives. Aube was taken to headquarters where he spent the night prior to appearing in court the following morning on the abduction charge preferred by the girl's father. And while Rose Alma begged the officers to "take her too" she had to cry her little heart out all alone in the boarding house.

In the meantime Mr. Boucher had been informed by a police officer that the case had developed, and he hastened to the city to retrieve his daughter and to cast her love to the dogs of the law. He was there in the morning when the case was called in the police court. The prosecutor had a complete brief of the case against Aube, how he had persisted in his attentions to the girl after being "warned off" and how finally he had carried her off against her better will; in short, that he abducted her.

Things looked very black for Oscar Aube when all of a sudden it occurred to Judge Choquette to ask what the girl had to say about the matter. Seated in the court, he invited her to take the stand and tell her story.

After the usual preliminaries of swearing in had been completed Judge Choquette asked the witness, "Did this man (indicating Oscar Aube) abduct you?" "No, your honor. I abducted him," came the astonishing reply. Even the prisoner raised his hand in protest, but the girl went on regardless. "He didn't abduct me. I love him and wanted to come. I want to stay now and get married if you'll only let him go. We came here intending to get married, but it is not so easy to get married when you know that the police are on your track trying to stay you."

With the completion of this remark Judge Choquette asked the witness, "Do you know what the law says about abduction?" "Yes, your honor. I know it is a crime, but I don't care. I want to get married."

The judge then asked the witness, "Do you know what the law says about abduction?" "Yes, your honor. I know it is a crime, but I don't care. I want to get married."

realing outburst of emotion the girl broke into a torrent of tears and the court was thrown into an uproar. With the wisdom that generally characterizes Judge Choquette in cases of heart interest he turned to the father. "Don't you think, under the circumstances, it would be better to let them get married? Their condition is sad enough now without making it any worse. You can take your daughter back if you wish, but you must realize that the daughter you take back is not the daughter you lost."

For a moment the father hung his head in perplexity and then he answered that he would withdraw the charge against Aube if they got married at once! And while the wheels of the law grind slowly, as a rule, they did not grind slowly that morning for in a very few minutes the lovers were legally married with Detective Masse, the "big as best man. Even the father of Rose Alma attended the ceremony, and as an earnestness of his good will he paid all the bridal expenses and financed a modest honeymoon to boot.

And so it was that Oscar Aube, though expecting a long term of abducting, was surprised and delighted with a life sentence.

No Wonder This Man Smiles

WOULDN'T you smile, too, if you had taken out a ten thousand dollar straight life policy contract to pay premiums every year for the duration of your life, and then to be handed a paid up policy for the ten thousand dollars at the end of the eighteenth year?

That is the happy experience of Mr. Lawrence this year. The generous profits earned by his Mutual policy have caused his straight life policy to be paid up by about eighteen and a half premiums. And from this date on he will draw profits annually.

The Mutual principle of life assurance plus sound, progressive management is responsible for the generous profits earned for the policyholders of the Mutual Life of Canada.

The Mutual Life agent will be glad to explain the type of policy mentioned above and show you his little book giving actual results, not promised results, of Mutual Life Policyholders for the past 45 years. Invite him to call.
