—A REAL GOOD TIME. —A rather unique form of entertainment under the heading of the Spinsters Convention was presented in the Tignish Hall by a score of spinster women and one lone male. The evening was spent in a most enjoyable and interesting manner. The program was well planned and the entertainment was of a high order. The sum of $91.00 was realized which goes to help defray the expenses of the rink.

—It is unquestionable that many a woman has, as the phrase is "caught her death of cold" by the manner of her dress. Yet in the man the fact is as it seems to be, and the lightness of women's garments means no health imperiling.

—All manner of theories have been advanced to account for this. In especial it has been suggested that both the dress fashions of women and their weather-resistivity are rooted in woman's keener appreciation of the claims of the race-conserving instinct.

—Oliver Wendell Holmes, I believe it was, who first advanced the theory. To recall his words: "Woman is under the guidance of a higher law than any relating to her individual safety. It is in virtue of this supreme indifference to consequences, this sublime contempt of disease and death as compared with the loss of the smallest personal advantage, that woman has attained the power of resistance to exposure that so astonishes the male sex."

—Still it has to be remarked that "lightness has not always been the outstanding characteristic of women's attire."

—Fashion plates of the long ago bear mirth-provoking testimony to the contrary. Recall the vanished eras of stays and bodices, bustles and billowy skirts, and one cannot doubt that there have been times when women's clothing was in many respects more uncomfortable and cumbersome than men's.

—Nevertheless in every era, in eras of cumbersome clothing as in eras of light, all available mortality tables go to show that the life-expectancy of women has averaged higher than men's.

—That is the significant thing, and a thing that is most suggestive. For it indicates that, whatever the source, women possess an innate vitality and disease-resistivity superior to that possessed by men.

—Add the fact that, during the past half century, at all events, women have from early girlhood been dressed in styles making for a bodily hardening, and we have perhaps a fully adequate explanation of the ability of the present generation of women to dress in styles that sometimes seem almost suicidal.

—This, at any rate, is the answer I would offer to the riddle raised by the peculiarities of women's present-day dress.

—SYDNEY, N. S., Jan. 12.—While attending to the draw on Little Bras D'Or bridge during the height of the gale which raged over Cape Breton Thursday night the bridge tender, Thomas Doucette, aged 70, was swept from the structure by the wind, fell into the swift running waters of Bras D'Or Gut and was drowned.

—"And how do you like our town?" said the continental landlord to his American visitor.
 "I hate it," was the reply. "It's as hot as the infernal regions, and just as uncomfortable."
 "Ah," said the landlord, admiringly, "there anywhere you Americans have not been."

SIMPLE TRIMMING

Draw-in thread work provides a simple and delightful way of trimming underwear of lawn, muslin, or China silk, anything that is dainty and soft. It is good on children's dresses. The work is done in the following way: First draw out one thread—as for hem-stitching—then take a length of button-hole silk in the color in which you wish to introduce. Knot this to the next thread in the material, and when drawing this thread out the button-hole silk is drawn in. The reason for drawing out the first thread is to make room for the thicker thread to be drawn in. Use another color for the next line, and a third shade for the line below it. You will be delighted with the result. A heavier line may be introduced by using a double length of the button-hole silk. Before drawing this in pull out two threads from the material, one each side of the thread in the material which you are knotting to the contrasting color. Measure the length of button-hole silk required, double it on itself and then fasten the loop to the thread in the material which you are going to pull. Care must be taken not to make a clumsy knot, so that the thread will go through quite easily.

SETTING OUT BULBS

October and November are the best months in which to plant bulbs. Dig up the ground for the bulb beds and mix through the soil a liberal amount of well rotted manure. Set the bulbs at least three inches deep; they should be set in regard to color and height of flowers, as a promiscuous setting of bulbs, three years old, should be rest. Separate the bulbs, and set them in a trench as a border along walks they are very pretty, as their blossoms beckon a welcome to all who approach. After the bulbs are planted, cover the soil with a mulch of dead leaves, and over these lay a few boards raised them at one side by placing a few stones under each board, to allow more the evening when the winter is past, not too early, as the flowers will be fuller and more beautiful when not touched by snow.

APPLE BUTTER FOR WINTER DAYS.

The soft, warm, bright autumn days, shortly each one until they speed away, are apple butter days. Already you have the finest apples in the cellar for winter eating, while others are being made into apple jelly, bottled, etc. Some are being marketed some given away and yet others left for apple butter.
 Apple butter is easiest made when the bottled cider is prepared first. Boil fresh, carefully strained sweet cider over a brisk fire until reduced about one-fifth.
 Only tart apples that cook readily should be used for apple butter making. To every half gallon of reduced cider add six quarts of peeled and quartered apples, and cook until softer, and quite thick like marmalade. Stir
