BROKEN WINGS

CONTINUED

NIGHT

Katherine trembled. "An island?" she repeated. "We alone on it?"

"Unfortunately, yes."

Tears started to Katherine's eyes. For the first time in her life she was squarely facing a situation she could not control. "I can't believe it," she said half to herself.

"Tomorrow you can see for yourself," Bill told her. "It will be too dark soon for any prospecting today. To be exact, we are on an island about three miles long and a mile and a half to two miles wide, as nearly as I can make out. I suppose it is some part of the South Seas group, though I hadn't realized we had drifted that far. Luckily we have fresh water, and those brown things you see over there are a couple of coconuts I found under a palm tree half a mile from here. Then I found some clams growing in the water on the other side of the big rock. I managed to get a cluster of them loose and thought we'd roast them over the fire for our supper."

Unconsciously he spoke with some pride and enthusiasm. He had not yet realized the extent of their isolation. If only Katherine would play up this would be a glorious adventure. A tropical island all their own, shellfish, coconuts, fish to catch when he could rig up some kind of line, small animals in the woods birds to trap. All the small boy that lives eternally in every man thrilled to the challenge of wresting a living from this strange and lonely land.

He led the way to the driftwood repiled for the fire. Katherine, still dazed, followed him.

"See," he pointed to the pile of shells, green brown in color, resting on a broad piece of wood, "there's our dinner, first, second and third courses. Now if you will take the knife and get those outer husks off the coconuts we can drink the milk I'll get some water to wash it down."

Katherine looked doubtfully at the smooth, brown outer husks of the coconuts.

"I don't think I can do it," she said.

What Our Girls Need

When Languid, Anemic and Feeling Run Down.

When a girl grows languid, dull and irritable, when her color fades and she becomes pale, you may be sure that the cause is anemia, or impoverished blood. The bright, red color of the blood is caused by the real presence in it of millions of tiny red corpuscles. It is these tiny bodies that carry nourishment from the blood to the tissues. They also cause the glow of health in cheeks and lips. When a girl's blood is deficient in these red corpuscles her body is under-nourished, her nerves starved, and there is serious danger of a decline. What is needed is an improvement in the quality of the blood, and it is a scientific fact that a course of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will so enrich and purify the blood that all traces of anemia and its accompanying weaknesses will disappear. As an evidence of the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases of this kind, Mrs. John Finnin, Howland Station, P. E. I., says:—"I am glad to take this opportunity of recommending Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My daughter was in a badly run down condition; very pale, nervous and much under weight. We tried several medicines, but they did not seem to do her any good, so I decided to give her Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Almost from the start she began to improve, and after the use of a few boxes she had gained in weight, her appetite improved and she had a better color in her cheeks—in fact she had fully regained her former good health. I would advise every mother of young girls to give them Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at the first sign of an anemic condition."

"You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont."

A BRIEF

Bill had forgotten his ill humor. "Never mind. I'll show you how. You can watch the fire. One thing we've got to be mighty careful of is our matches. I've got some in a waterproof case here, about a hundred, I guess. You've got your pocket lighter. We ought to try to bury the fire some way, so there will be embers in the morning. And remember never light a match or your lighter if we have a fire going."

"But surely you don't think we will be here long," Katherine faltered.

Bill's enthusiasm faded and his face became grave. "That is hard to tell. I haven't any idea where we are, but from the looks of the trees and so on, we must be somewhere in the South Seas. As you know, there are literally thousands of islands scattered around here besides the big ones like the Society group. And we didn't broadcast any position for hours before we crashed."

"But my father was following us the Seahawk is looking for us now," Bill explained patiently. "But they were hundreds, probably thousands of miles behind us. I lost track of our speed part of the time during the storm, but it was terrific at times. I am very sure that the search is on, but we must live here as though many weeks were ahead before we could be rescued."

"Couldn't we put up a flag or something to attract the attention of ships?"

"We'll try to rig up something of the sort in the morning, but I haven't any idea what ships, if any, ply in this part of the world. Trading vessels, small ones, undoubtedly cruise through these waters, but it's all a matter of chance, their seeing us. And we've got to manage to keep alive in the meantime."

Katherine sank to the sand. It was more he finds.

Trains of thought have many head-on collisions.

The more faults a man looks for the more he finds.
