Progress of Exposition.

Visitors to the Exposition grounds in Paris are astonished at the rapid progress that has been made in the work during the past summer, especially in the construction of the buildings and palaces.

On the Champ de Mars and the Invalides new cities have sprung up as if touched by magic. Looking from the Alma bridge toward Paris the view is most attractive. The two banks of the Seine appear covered with immense skeltons and steel framework alternating with the buildings practically finished.

On the right bank, next the bridge, is the immense palace in which over one hundred congresses will be held during the Exposition. It is in the Louis XVI. style, of fine appearance, and will stand out against the foliage of the Cours la Reine, putting a fine and distinguished feature of the end of the sight on the century into a corner of the Exposition, which will be filled with constructions of modern style. A little further along towards Paris is the horticultural pa-ace. One of the most interesting place, the Paris Exposition will be the palace of mines and metallurgy. This palace is situated on the Champ de Mars. It forms the angle of the buildings constructed on the side of the Avenue de la Bourdon-nais, at the foot of the Eiffel tower. The facade is stretched along the vacant space left at the axis of the tower, forming a continuation of the Palace of Liberal Arts. The central dome has the form of an immense tiara. A concrete gallery is arranged on the facade situated on the side of the Champ-de-Mars gardens. The windows are at the level of the wall. The bell-tower which will surmount the porch of the entry will receive a chime of 32 bells. The diameter of the big bell will be one meter at the mouth and that of the smallest 19 centimeters. The large bell will weigh 350 kilograms and the smallest bell hardly above four kilograms. The palace will cost about $360,000, and will contain only mining products.

LIKES AND DISLIKES.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephens had quite a falling out the other morning at breakfast—it was on the question of whether Mr. Stephens should eat porridge or not. Mrs. Stephens took the affirmative; her lord and master the negative.

"Everything that's good for you, you don't eat, and everything that's bad for you, you crave crave!" said Mrs.
Stephens.

"H'm," said Mr. Stephens. "H'm," may mean anything ranging from scorn and contempt to wonder and delight.
In this case it was meant to convey a moderate amount of polite, but amiten-ly digested interest.

"You like your eggs hard and your bread soft. You won't eat porridge, though you know the Scotch are!"

"Because the Scotch eat porridge, does that say that it'll make me a Highlander if I eat it?" Demanded Mr.
Stephens.

"It'll make you a deal healthier than you are," said Mrs. Stephen.

"But I don't like it," said Mrs. Stephens.

"Then you should like it, and there's something wrong with you if you don't," retorted Mr. Stephens.

"You'll be prescribing Dr. Cass's Dyspepsia Tablets for me next," said Mr. Stephens with biting sarcasm.

"And why not?" exclaimed Mrs.
Stephens warmly. "They've cured better men than you of their dislike for wholesome food."

"They won't get the chance to cure me," said Mr. Stephens.

"You're a fool," said Mrs. S. ephens.
But we must excuse Mrs. Stephens. Men are such unreasonable creatures at times.
