Party to Excavate Site in Palestine

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—Dean William Wade of the Pacific School of Religion and professor of Semitic Literature, will organize an expedition to excavate the site of the City of Mispah in Palestine in hopes of finding some key to the Hittite language, he declared, before sailing for Egypt today.

The untold story of the Hittites is one of the greatest gaps in ancient history, Professor Wade declared. The people who came to Palestine before them, the Egyptians, and those who came afterward gave up the task of deciphering the many inscriptions of the language.

Bogus "Mounties"

OTTAWA, Jan. 7.—Royal Canadian Mounted Police headquarters receive from time to time queries respecting bogus members of the "Mounties" who extort money from the public through lectures on the alleged activities of that body.

Today a telegram was received at headquarters from a United States city respecting a man representing himself to be a captain in the R. C. M. P., who delivered a colorful address recently on the experiences of Canadian "Mounties" in "getting their man." A reply is being forwarded immediately that the gentleman described does not appear in the records at headquarters as a member of the R. C. M. P.

Scotch and Irish settlers each class arriving in large numbers and each choosing the part of the Island that seemed the most like their native land.

It was during the early history of P. E. I. that its large forests were depleted by settlers unaccustomed to life amongst the trees.

Many of the people on our Island still cling to their old world nationality instead of banding together as the Sons and Daughters of Canada.

Our Province is small but still it is the best land in the world and no Islander need be ashamed of his or her inheritance.

Our Island compares very favorably with the beauty spots of the world. P. E. I. needs more of the boosting spirit and less of the knocking spirit and our land would then come into the prominence which it so rightly deserves because here we have the best community in the world.

In closing his address Mr. Duffy told the Y's Men's Club that they should form a real live boosters club and that they could be of great service to the community in setting before the people an ideal which we should all strive for.

The hearty thanks of the club were tendered Mr. Duffy by the President.

The meeting then closed with the singing of God Save The King.

Move Made to Bring Horse Back to Own

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The Institute of the Horse has been founded in London to revive interest in horsemanship and riding. The founders admit the motor car is boss of the road, but they want to rethrone the horse as king of the bridle paths.

The institute hopes to reopen a number of bridle paths throughout the country, which have fallen into disuse, and make it possible to make long horseback journeys in comparative comfort.

Aged Ottawa Woman Murdered Suspect Arrested

OTTAWA, Jan. 7.—Murdered by an unknown assailant as she was about to put a batch of biscuits in the oven to bake, Miss May Kilfoyle, aged 70, was found dying in her lonely farm house, near Manotick, 15 miles from here. She died on her way to the hospital without regaining consciousness. Napoleon Pelletier of Manotick, alleged to have been in Miss Kilfoyle's employ was arrested in Ottawa tonight, and held for investigation.

THE MARKETS

(Canadian Press)

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 7. —(Eggs) —Unusually mild weather throughout the East is bringing a weak condition to the egg market. As a result of increasing receipts, Montreal reports that fresh stocks are arriving from every direction with practically no buyers. Toronto is lower and Vancouver market has undergone another decline. Toronto jobbing fresh sueciais 54, extras 52, firsts 50, storage unchanged.

Montreal with stocks accommulating the tone of the egg market is weak and prices are lower. Cars of eggs from British Columbia on consignment are tending to demoralize the market. Jobbing fresh extras 52; firsts 47.

Winnipeg egg receipts show a further increase. Jobbing fresh extras 52 to 54, firsts 47, seconds 35. Storage extras 46, firsts 38, seconds 30. Saskatchewan fresh receipts increasing. Dealers are quoting county shippers extras 45, firsts 40, seconds 25. Jobbing fresh firsts 60. Poultry market is unchanged under light receipts. Edmonton egg market lower under a plentiful supply. Dealers are quoting country shippers delivered extras 38, firsts 35. Calgary receipts of fresh eggs unusually heavy for this season. Dealers are paying country points extras 38, firsts 33. Sufficient fresh are arriving to meet local demand. Vancouver fresh egg market is unsettled dealers paying country extras 35, firsts 33, jobbing fresh extras 40, firsts 39, seconds and pullets 32.

Halifax, N. S. unchanged. St. John, N. B. fresh eggs arriving in fair quantities with prices unchanged. Markets still are stocked with storage eggs.

MONTREAL, Que., Jan. 7. —Extreme dullness marked the export trade in Canadian grain on the Montreal market today owing to the very limited demand from foreign buyers. The only sale reported was five loads of No. 1 Northern wheat at ten and half cents per bushel over the Winnipeg May option C.I.F. Bay Ports in order to fill engagements of ocean freight. The domestic trade in cash grain was also slow, there being little demand from local and export buyers but the tone of the market for oats was steady and prices were unchanged with car lots of Ontario and Quebec No. 2 white quoted at 53 cents No. 3 white at 52 cents and No. 4 white at 501-2 cents per bushel ex-track.

The demand for spring wheat and winter flour was quiet but prices were well maintained. A fair trade was transacted in millfeed and the tendency was steady. The market for rolled oats was moderately active and firm and ther was no further change in the egg situation prices being steady at the recent declines noted while the trade was slow. The butter and cheese market continued quiet but firm.

Rare Literary Treat

preserve the simplicity and homeliness of his subject matter with the sustained elevation necessary to the epic style. Though his title to poetic fame has receded, he is still second only to Shakespeare in the effect he has had upon the English speaking world.

In his prose works Scott used the vehicle of Romance with some sense of disenchantment, and he appreciated natural things less in themselves than through their human and historical associations. Discernable in his romantic novels is a vein of realism—which was also a mediaeval trait.

Like the plays of Shakespeare the Waverley Novels were written very quickly; but they have caught and held the world. There are thirty-one complete stories which divide themselves into three groups of unequal volume, but each covering a period of about six years. The "familiar spirit" who accomplished this gigantic literary task while Scott dined and talked in society and attended the court sessions, has kept the secret of the achievement!

The speaker referred to Scott's brilliant manner in painting the natural, vernacular life of the Lowlands. "The Antiquary" might have come from the hand of a gentler Ben Johnson, "Old Mortality" is the swiftest, most varied and most fully alive of all his novels. The greatest novel of all, Prof. Flemming considered, is "The Heart of Midlothian."

In "Ivanhoe" Scott went back, for the first time since his poetic compositions, to medieaval times, and made a new departure in placing in England the setting of the story. In this novel he opened a new vein of historical fiction.

"The Abbot" contains many skillfully written historical scenes. "Ivanhoe" and "The Fortunes of Nigel" stand out for their color and pageantry. In "Quentin Durward" a very blunt and life like picture is given of Louis the Eleventh. The writer's ability to handle tragedy was illustrated by reference to "St. Ronan's Well."

The lecturer dealt with all Scott's novels in turn weighing briefly but thoroughly the literary merits and defects of each.

Scott's use of the supernatural was dwelt upon. He had his full share of the "feelings of the night" that we all have more or less, and which Shakespeare has so magnificently expressed. Scott unfortunately was not able to find the proper words except on one occasion, in "Wandering Willie's Tale." Generally, his hold on the springs of feeling is very faint, and he loses his touch with the coming of daylight. He had not enough of the "black drop" in his heart; that imaginative reticence, which makes one feel in reading "Othello" that, horrible as are the words of Iago, they are nothing to what he does not say.

Scott's brightest strands are taken from his calling of the Law. His advocates and judges have living tones and faces, and they can hide nothing from him. He was also perfectly familiar with the religious controversies of the period and theological argument and distinctions came as readily from his pen as "profane litigation."

Scott was the first to describe effectively the Highland temperament and character. He ranks as a novelist next to Balzac in the number of his characters and the truth with which they are delineated, Balzac being admittedly the master painter of man as a social animal. The French writer is higher and deeper, but Scott has the advantage in that he make his readers happier. He walks by Nature with a lighter step and through a more beautiful country; and he has a greater relish by the wayside than has Balzac. He is more like Chaucer; while Balzac is like Montaigne and Rabelais.

The chorus of the modern novel is usually lacking in any source of hope or comfort; but the world of the Waverly novels is so far like the natural world that it evades formulas and formal treatment. What fields Scott has not covered may easily be discerned, but it is not easy accurately to measure the ground he has traversed, or to estimate aright the impress of his power and breadth. His influence upon British and foreign novels can hardly be measured. His real legacy, was in raising the novel, through the revelation of the past and the play of national character, using his material not only for poetic groundwork like Shakespeare, nor in quasi-epic narrative, as the poets of the 18th and 19th centuries but for narrative prose. In France, Germany, Russia, Holland and Poland there have been at some time distinct, if transient, schools of Scott disciples.

The lecturer concluded with the quotation of an appreciative sonnet on Scott's genius by Joyce Kilmer the brilliant young American poet who was killed in the War.

A sincere vote of thanks, moved by Mr. D. K. Currie, seconded by Mr. Peter McCourt, and supported by Mayor McKenna Mr. W. L. Cotton, and Chief Justice Mathieson, was tendered Prof. Flemming.

In supporting the vote of thanks the Chief Justice paid a high tribute to the scholarly attainments of the lecturer and the value to the youth of the Province of such literary ability. Referring to Scott he said it was impossible to measure the influence of this great writer, not only upon the Scottish people but on the world outside. In measuring the greatness of men, the truest standard, perhaps, is how far their influence has affected the race and how beneficial has been that effect. Measured by this standard, the works of Scott are very great. We cannot imagine Scotland as a country, or the Scottish people or their history apart from what Scott has written and the world-wide introduction he has given to them. The soundness of his life; the utter absence of what was coarse, the high elevation of his standards, the heroic height to which he reached has had much to do with elevating the character and the performance of the whole Scottish people.

There are not very many men, continued the Chief Justice, who have contributed more to the uplift and advancement of civilization in its higher aspects than has Scott. One can understand how, measured by strict standards, much of his poetry might not comply with those rules that men of literary taste and high literary education have fixed as the aim, and test of value. Perhaps too much emphasis is placed on compliance with standards which we attempt to apply to the lofty expressions of genius. The best measure, perhaps is: How are we affected, particularly in the impressionable days of youth by the reading of Scott's poetry?

The speaker could recall the effect which the first reading of "Marmion" had upon him as a boy, —the wonderful language used in the description of Flodden Field. One could not experience the effect of that great poem without having his mind, his imagination and his standard of living raised. More is due, the speaker believed, to writings such as that than to all the drill sergeants and other influences that have been brought to bear in raising the tone and valor of the Scottish people. In the Great War the fact that the Scottish regiments there fought so valiently was owing in some measure at least to the splendid enthusiasm and military zeal that arose from the great writers, the best of whom was perhaps Scott himself.

The speaker concluded by stressing the educative value of such a lecture as delivered by Prof. Flemming.

The Chairman, who added a few words of appreciation to what had been said, announced that the next lecture would be by Mr. W. L. Cotton, who will speak on some old time literary and other institutions of Charlottetown.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem and "Auld Lang Syne."
