While there they attended Chautauque, and thoroughly enjoyed the splendid programme presented.—Mrs. Cole and her daughter, Miss Charlotte Walsh of West Scumville, Mass., are spending the summer with the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Buchanan.—Mr. John McLean of Long Creek had the misfortune of being thrown from a wagon a few days ago, when his horse became frightened and ran away. CHAUTAUQUA.—Mr. R. H. Rogers, who has agreed to look after the interests of Chautauque here reports that the committee promoting the re-engagement for 1926 has made substantial progress. A new plan is being followed this year. Heretofore a small group of citizens acted as guarantors for the sale of 600 adult tickets during the few weeks before the opening of Chautauque. Experience has shown that the guarantors were not always able to give sufficient time and effort to place their full quota, with the result that deficits had to be made up by cash payments or tickets bought and paid for which could not be used. This has caused a great deal of dissatisfaction. By the present plan the tickets are being sold in advance, each purchaser becoming a guarantor only for the number of tickets he can put to profitable use. The tickets will be paid for on delivery a short time before the coming of Chautauque. The sale will be pressed energetically until the required number are disposed of. A small additional number may be sold to cover possible shrinkage due to purchasers removing from the city and other causes. The sale will then be closed and no adult tickets will be offered the public next summer. Only two hundred tickets remain to be placed, and it is expected that these will all be disposed of within the next few days.

TO MR. COLES we are indebted for the best measures on our Statute Book. To him, more than any other man, are we indebted for many of the priceless privileges which we today enjoy. And these great privileges—these acts of blessing and amelioration—were not secured without a struggle—a struggle which we fear shatteringly his mind and shortened his days of usefulness. Yes; our privileges were dearly bought. They were the purchase of suffering and untold energy. Never had man to encounter greater obstacles, or stouter difficulties. With a limited education to assist him he had to fight against banks, incorporated companies and men of means. Springing from the ranks, he had to battle against an established aristocracy, the bar, the merciless landlords, and the prejudice of the worst form of Toryism. But he triumphed over them all, and in the face of an opposition before which ordinary men would quail he obtained for the people free institutions, civil liberty, and parliamentary reforms for which they will ever cherish his memory in grateful remembrance. Mr. Coles was the father of responsible Government—a system which not only gave the people the right to choose their own rulers, but which broke up as corrupt a clique ever exercised the power of Government over an injured people. The Land Purchase bill was another child of the same parent. This great measure not only curtailed the power of landlordism, but it made the ten of many whose necks had long been galled by the yoke of a proprietary system. The Elective Franchise was another of his measures and today is the proudest birthright. This Act effectually broke down the power to aristocracy and wealth, and gave the young men of the country, who were bound to obey its laws and yield to its mandates, a voice in making those laws and in saying what those mandates should be. The One Ninth Bill was also a creature of the Liberal party headed by Coles. It was a beneficial measure and gave much relief to the country. But the greatest measure of his life was the Free Education Law. This measure was vastly in advance of the age, and whatever may be said of it, now that it has been allowed to grow imperfect, it cannot be denied that it was the agency, in its day, of raising young men all over the country on a level with those in the city—of preparing them to exercise the franchise with safety and discretion. So beneficial was this law in its operations that in a marvellously short time it would be difficult to find a boy or a girl in the country who could not read and write. Hundreds of our young men today are filling positions of honor and responsibility in all parts of the world, who, but for George Coles, would be groping their way in obscurity and poverty. Besides all these popular measures Mr. Coles secured the passage of others equally useful in our country, but unfortunately for the country were rejected, through the underhand influence of the proprietors, by the Imperial authorities. Were it not for this unhallowed influence—an influence which had too long been the bane of our progress—the measures of Mr. Coles would long ago have banished the hated system of landlordism from his native land. And thus on the 21st August, 1875 the stately column broke. The beacon light was quenched in smoke. The trumpet's silver sound was still. The warrior silent on the hill. It is but natural that a car so richly finished in two beautiful colors, so far advanced in engineering, so notable in performance, so remarkably low-priced, should quickly come into its own. Its power plant is a revelation of what experienced engineering can accomplish with six cylinders in power, getaway, quick pickup and consistent economy.

See this remarkable car. Feel the thrill of driving it. Small down payment—a year to pay.
