The Girl Who Had No Chance

By MARION RUBINCAM

LEAVE TAKING Chapter 15

It was rather a tired girl who climbed out of bed that cool morning of mid-October. This was the day when Mr. and Mrs. O'Neil were to leave for their trip south and there were the usual number of details to be hurried through.

Ruth glanced up at the sky as she shut her windows. A little sunlight, still weak and uncertain, glimmered through the blinds. The grass and the cobwebs against the wall stood up bravely with all its avelar and pink beauty. This was the time of year that most delighted Ruth—its bracing freshness usually made her blood dance, made her, as she said, want to go out and conquer the world.

Just today she had little of the conquerer's spirit. No one can have the conquerer's spirit whose mind must consider first such details as getting the breakfast, and putting the last minute things into the trunks—and making the trunk.

When Ruth reached the kitchen she was greeted with the odor of baking bread, and found her mother pulling out the rich brown loaves from the oven.

"But you were going to let that go for me to do this morning Ruth pressed."

"I can do it better than you, and anyway, I'll be having a long rest. You'll have work enough," Mrs. O'Neil answered. "At least I'll be up enough bread to last you a week. When's Mrs. Belding going over?"

The afternoon as soon as she finished with Mrs. James' sewing, Ruth answered, trying on a big apron. "I'm giving her the little room next to mine, then we'll shut up your room and father's, and that will save cleaning."

"That's wise, Mrs. O'Neil approved. "And, Ruth, you'd better can a lot of apple sauce before those apples rot. It will make dessert for this winter."

"I know," the girl answered, beginning to set the table for breakfast.

"I wish I didn't worry about you."

Regina Woman Is Glad That She Did As Doctor Told Her

Took Tanlac on Physicians Advice and it Put Her in Fine Condition, States Mrs. Coles

"Tanlac is certainly an ideal medicine," recently said Mrs. Bessie Coles, highly esteemed resident of 1851 Lorne St., Regina, Sask. "I was in such a badly run-down condition that I just felt miserable all the time. My appetite had failed, I lost weight steadily. My nerves were awfully unstrung; many times I couldn't get even an hour's sleep all night long and I never felt like doing my housework at all.

"I was badly in need of something to build me up and when a physician advised me to take Tanlac, I really don't feel like the same person, the medicine has done me such a world of good. My nerves have steadied down, I am sleeping like a child, eating heartily, have gained several pounds and am feeling just fine. Knowing what a wonderful medicine Tanlac is, I can sincerely recommend it to anyone."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35-million bottles sold.

It seems wicked to go off and leave you like this."

"Oh, Mother, don't talk that way," Ruth protested, almost indignantly. "I won't be alone because Mrs. Belding will be with me, and I know just how much money I can draw every week to live on."

But Mrs. O'Neil continued with advice and instruction as she sat on the train and as she finished putting clothes into the one trunk and the big suitcase that they were taking.

"Fortunately your Aunt Sarah lives in the south where it's warm," she remarked, coming back to the "beast" waist. "My summer clothes can be made fairly comfortable but my winter ones aren't pretty hopeless. At least I shouldn't have to buy anything warm this year."

"Not if you stay till spring," Ruth answered. "And you'd better if you can. Father's always been in bad weather."

James O'Neil came down at breakfast, plainly excited at the prospect of the trip.

"If only you were going," he said, putting an arm around Ruth as she came in from the kitchen. "I feel like such a baby, to be taking my daughter's money for a pleasure trip."

"It's a health trip, and you're to come back feeling fine," Ruth answered, adopting the soothing maternal tone she often used when talking with him.

"Ruth, you won't do anything silly or sentimental-like getting married while I'm away," he asked anxiously.

"Don't worry, Father, I won't. When anything like that happens I'll let you know about it a long time in advance."

"I've kept you down long enough with my own worthlessness and helplessness," the man said. "If you marry one of the Marketown boys, you'll be yourself down for life—to the same sort of thing."

Ruth said nothing. A vision of Tim came back again—Tim was a Marketown boy—but how different from all the others she decided.

And eventually, they stood on the station platform, waiting for the local that was almost always late. It was only 10 o'clock, but Ruth felt as though she had lived through a whole day.

"You'd better lie down and rest when you get back, you look tired out," her mother advised.

Ruth nodded her head. She was tired awfully tired.

The train came in at last, and Ruth went on board long enough to see both of them settled comfortably in a seat. Then she kissed them good-bye hurriedly, glad that the whistle was blowing so the farewells need not be prolonged.

She was tired, and she was nervous, and she hated walking back alone through the streets to the empty house.

As she turned from the station platform when the train had gone, it was to find Tim waiting on the steps, an eager smile on his face.

"But you shouldn't be away from your office," she protested as he walked back with her.

"Oh, the old man won't know," he answered easily. "And I know I would be feeling blue. So I hid out and came down to walk home with you."

We'll Back A Jar Of Vicks Against Any Cold In Town

Buy a 50c Jar, Use All Or Part of It. If Not Simply De-wighted, Get Money Back

While the famous vaporizing salve, Vicks VapoRub, is introduced here, there will be absolutely nothing to lose in trying it for any cold trouble. Druggists have been authorized to sell 50c jars on trial. The Vicks Chemical Company, Montreal, will gladly re- turn the money paid to anyone who 30 days after trying Vicks is not enthusiastic over its quick, doubly direct action.

For a cold, just rub Vicks on over throat and chest. It is immediately absorbed through and stimulates the skin. At the same time the ingredients are vaporized by the body heat and with each breath are carried through the nose and throat into the lungs.

The usual cold can be broken up overnight. Spasmodic cough is relieved in 15 minutes because there is no dosing to upset their little stomachs. And the ingredients, Camphor, Menthol, Eucalyptus, Thyme and Wintergreen, are just as good for their little daily hurts, cuts, sores, burns, bruises, itchings, etc.

Here follows what some Canadian mothers say about Vicks.

Always Keeps It Now

Mrs. R. K. Rankin, 115 McGill St., Toronto, says: "Last fall I had a very bad attack of bronchitis. I saw Vicks VapoRub advertised and tried it according to directions. I could not exaggerate about your valuable medicine. It is a most pleasant and effective relief for any kind of colds. I will always keep it in the house."

Mrs. B. Livingston of 128 Erie Ave., Brantford, Ont., says: "I highly recommend your Vicks VapoRub. I have used it for colds, pains, sore throat and burns for myself and the rest of my family. I have also told many of my friends about it and they too, are using it with good results."

Mrs. A. Lott, of 72 Empress St., London, Ont., writes: "I wish to say for children with croup Vicks is grand and for colds it has no equal. Baby had just come in and wanted Vicks put on his hand, which hurt while playing. It is a fine thing and I wouldn't be without it in the house."

Tomorrow—Riches Refused

Twenty five tons of letters and documents from various Government offices in London are destroyed every month.

The papers to be destroyed are sent by each office to pulping mills in different parts of the country, where they are converted into pulp and then sold as such to pulp mills.

In each Government office a certain number of private papers and documents are selected for destruction at the end of the month. They are sorted by the heads of the various departments. Then a list of them is made and submitted to the Minister in charge of the office.

If, in his opinion, any of the papers should be retained, they are put into the permanent files of the office. The papers selected for destruction are put every day into a special strong room, where they are cut by a machine into four parts and then put into sacks.

When the sacks are sent to the pulping mills, a responsible official witnesses their destruction. In seven days the private papers of different Government departments were burnt. Before being burned the writing was obliterated by running each letter or paper through rollers saturated with black ink. When it was decided to reduce the papers to pulp the following process was adopted for obliterating their contents, but this rendered the paper almost useless for pulping purposes, and it was decided to cut them in the manner mentioned above.

Certain letters and documents of great importance are never destroyed. In due course they reach the Record Office where the archives of the nation are stored.

Parson Helps To End College Hash Strike

MONTREAL, Jan. 29.—Rev. J. A. Greenlee, formerly of Georgetown, P. E. I., and other Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland points will entertain 65 students of Presbyterian College, McGill, to dinner at Mount Royal Hotel tomorrow night at his own expense.

The event is expected to mark a rapprochement between the college authorities and the students who have been on somewhat strained relations with the powers that be for several months subsequent to their revolt at the persistent serving of hash for dinner. Rev. Mr. Greenlee, who is librarian at the college and rooms and dines with the boys, went out on "strike" with the students, the upshot being that for a time the college dinner hall was closed.

American relations are being restored and the students have secured a representative on the household committee of the college, whose meals are said to be quite satisfactory now.

THE MAKING OF COUNTERFEIT COINS

An ex-official of Scotland Yard, London, had this to say the other day of counterfeiters and counterfeiting:

There appears to be some fascination in a misapprehension, for no amount of punishment seems to deter a convicted counterfeiter from returning to his moulds and batteries the very moment he is free.

The modern counter takes a very high rank among intelligent criminals, and is as far removed from the forerunner of a few generations ago as an average man from the barbarian. But even today a few of the "basses" of coiners are almost equally primitive in their methods. Their batteries are crudely contrived out of domestic vessels, and the rest of their apparatus consists of plaster of Paris and plumbago to make the moulds, a crucible, an iron spoon, a file or two, and a little grease in fact, the whole of their equipment would be dear at half a crown. It is needless to say that they and their "satellite printers"—the men employed to pass the spurious coins—are often "jagged."

The "superior" counter however, is a man of considerable intelligence, who has often made an exhaustive study of metals and electro plating, and can produce coins as perfect in appearance as any that are issued from the Mint, and which satisfy all the ordinary tests of weight, and so on.

In fact, many of the coins they produce are actually made of silver, for it is possible to mould spurious coins of silver of the requisite fineness and yet make a profit of ten per cent on the manufacture. At this rate of profit the business is quite lucrative enough to compensate for a little risk. Good naturally such coins, which are of full weight and of standard silver, are most difficult to detect.

The process of coining is really very simple, although it requires both delicacy and manipulative skill. An exact impression is taken of the coin to be copied, and a mould from plaster of Paris, the molten metal is then poured into the mould through a small aperture in it. Any superfluous metal is filed away, and the part from which it is removed is most carefully filed.

The coins are now placed in a rack in a silver solution, in which they are soon covered with a coating of silver electrically deposited on them. To remove any suspicious newness they are covered with a mixture of grease and cigar ash or lampblack.

To increase the deception the coin which is copied is almost invariably old and worn, and the resulting copy, after undergoing the various doctoring processes, has all the appearance of a dirty, half obliterated coin of the days of Queen Victoria.

Probably none but an expert teller could detect these impostures, but the ordinary spurious coin made from pewter, antimony, lead, and similar base metals can almost invariably be detected by one of the following tests:

If on rubbing the coin with a moistened finger the bright metal appears under the worn and dirty surface, you may be sure the coin is counterfeit.

The practice of biting the coin, common to many people, is excellent for the spurious coin is always "grittier" as distinguished from the smoothness of a genuine coin. Also, if you find that your suspicious coin will make a mark on a slate, you may be sure that there is good ground for your distrust.

WILL SELL SCOTTISH ESTATES

The Duke of Argyll is about to sell his estate, including Lochiel and Leuchair, Rossburn, Sutherlandshire, Lochearn, Aberdeenshire and Perthshire 19,000 acres, containing 227,000 acres, the Duke is head of one of the oldest and most illustrious families in Scotland, members of which have found fame in military, diplomatic and political services in their own land and in the larger fields of the United Kingdom and the British Empire. The present Duke, Niall Diarmid Campbell—is the tenth. It was in 1914 that he succeeded his uncle, the ninth Duke, who, as Marquis of Lorne, in 1871, married H. R. H. the Princess Louise, fourth daughter of Queen Victoria, and who from 1878 to 1883 served as Governor General of Canada. As head of the great clan Campbell of Argyllshire the Duke is "the MacCallan Inher" often written but incorrectly "MacCallum More"—or "Son of Colin the Great." The annals of Clan Campbell are closely bound up with the history of Scotland for over six hundred years for it was in 1286 that Colin Campbell received the honor of Knighthood. The present Duke is the 43rd Knight and the 35th (some authorities say 30th only) Baron of Locove. The dukedom dates from 1701, but there were Marquises and Earls of Argyll for centuries before that. Inverary Castle has been the seat of the Campbells of Argyll since these centuries. It will be noted that the properties of the Duke about to be disposed of are not located in his ancestral shire of Argyll.

WHY WOMEN NAG

A wife who eternally frets and nags has adequate cause. But—

The cause is not what she thinks it is.

Not what her husband supposes it. Not what the neighbors say or even a cup of tea.

Try the experiment of listening to the tone instead of to the words. Attend closely to the intonations and cadences of that complaining voice. You will be startled at the suffering. True, the words are about the weather, the maid, the rabbit after that than the devil behind the screen of these complaints is hidden an inarticulate cry for help. Something terrible is going on in that woman's soul. Her heart is sick. She is in agony. What is she trying not to say?

"It is terrible! I do not love my husband! I so need to love and I can't. What shall I do? What shall I do?"

Women don't talk that way you say? No, but their breaking hearts make a confused meaning that to the understanding listener makes tragic confession.

MAKING A PUPPY MIND YOU

If a puppy you are training for hunting doesn't like to come to call he is probably too intent on his work. In this case he is promising. Try keeping him out of the field for a week or so, then take him out and don't let him get far away until you call him—and make him come, though don't shoot him (as lots of hunters would do; it ruins many a good dog, especially puppies; makes them gun-shy.) A little switch sometimes helps. Give him to understand that he's got to come to you when you want him. Work him sort of by degrees.

If this doesn't work, maybe it's because the dog is too accustomed to you or may be a little spoiled. In

"So your name is Tommy Johnson and your mother's name is Smith?"

"Yes, Ma'am; you see she married again I didn't."
