Best Treated Externally

THAT's why modern mothers prefer Vicks—it cannot upset delicate stomachs. Rubbed on throat and chest, it acts two ways at once:

(1) Its healing vapors, released by the body heat, are inhaled direct to the air passages;

(2) It "draws out" the soreness like an old-fashioned poultice.

"When the time comes for New Year's resolutions the first thing a man generally gives up is the price of a table reservation."

TOO EASILY BROKEN

Deacon Turtle (severely): Haven't you made any good New Year's resolutions, young man?

Rabbit: Yes, I resolved not to make any more resolutions!

THE LATE WIFE

Ordinary But Rich Mortal: I would like to have you paint a portrait of my late wife.

Great Artist (inattentively): Like most women, I suppose. But she will have to be on time—very prompt with her sittings—if she wants me to do the work.

She: Yes—and how!

SONIA

By

VIDA HURST

"What else can I think! He wasn't robbed. There was some money in his pockets." Her voice broke. "And the emerald ring he'd offered me.

"You see, Franklin, he had proposed to me again that afternoon. And when I told him I could not marry any one now. I'm afraid he misunderstood."

"He thought it was because of me?"

"Isn't it awful? I had no idea he cared like that."

His harsh voice grated on her nerves.

"That's your trouble. You've no idea of the hell you're responsible for."

She faced him sadly, admitting the truth of the charge, but hurt that he should make it.

Then she said, "Franklin, I can't go home now. I'll have to wait."

INSTALLMENT XXIX.

Sonia carried the newspaper announcing Henderson's death with her to a small hotel. She registered as Sonia Marsh, and Franklin left, promising to call later.

Sonia followed a bellboy to her room. She watched with apparently absorbed eyes as he raised a window and snapped on lights. She was not really seeing any motion he made although she tipped him, gratefully, thankful to be alone, to face the fact of this new tragedy, for which she was again indirectly responsible.

She read and reread the half-column article. There were no clews beyond the ring as to the motive for suicide. Henderson was connected with the Thomas Real Estate company. There were other details that gave no comfort to the bewildered girl.

What must have been his thoughts before he took the plunge? What anguish of disillusionment and uncertainty? She could imagine a man so controlled and well-balanced as Walter Henderson permitting himself to reach the point of desperation.

But how little, after all her boasted knowledge, she knew of men, their feelings or motives! They had all taken her by surprise—Don with his sudden tempestuous kisses the night he went away; Franklin with his unexpected loyalty; and now Walter Henderson who had taken his life for love of her.

Sonia unpacked the bag she had brought and ordered dinner in her room.

It was dark when she slipped out to buy more papers, all she could find. There was little variation in the stories. Henderson had been dead for many hours when found, probably a suicide, the motive unknown Two papers spoke of the emerald ring in an inner pocket and hinted at a love affair.

Back in her own room Sonia scanned the papers thoroughly, but there was nothing more to be learned.

The body had been taken to the morgue pending investigation. The thought made her shudder. She hoped she would not have to see him again. He had been in the lake two days. He was always so immaculate, so well attired, so fastidious. Tears streamed down her cheeks to think of him, floating for hours in the water.

At 9 o'clock Franklin called to tell her he had a bad headache and was going to bed. She felt relieved. For once she did not feel up to seeing him. But she answered sympathetically, asking if he had seen all the papers.

"Yes," he answered, wearily. "Nothing much to be learned, is there? Well, I'll see you to-morrow, Sonia."

When she was undressing for bed she remembered that the next morning her father would go to meet her. In the stress of her emotion over Henderson she had neglected, as always, her family.

* * *

She ran to the telephone, repentantly, and called Muncie. No matter how late it was she must talk to her father, must explain to him that she was not coming at the time she had set.

She sensed the instant fear in her father's voice.

"I'm all right, daddy. Don't be frightened."

"Why aren't you coming home?"

She tried to explain that the news of Henderson's death had been responsible for her staying in Chicago.

"But why should you stay, Sonia? What can you do?"

As always he was stubbornly intent on one idea.

"Mr. Henderson was a friend of mine," she cried, half angrily.

"Is that any reason why you should put off your trip home? I'm sorry, of course. He seemed like a very nice gentleman. But when are you coming?"

Sonia kicked the side of the bed. There was no use trying to explain to him.

"Oh, I don't know, daddy. A day or so. I want to see what they find out."

"Well, you can get the papers here. There's nothing you can do," he repeated. "I thought you were already on your way."

"Don't be silly about it darling."

"Where are you staying?"

She gave the name of her hotel.

"I want to talk with you, honey. You know a lot of things have happened that your mother and I can't understand. Why didn't you go to Berlin with your husband?"

"Oh, I told mother I'd tell you all about it when I come home. I can't do it now."

"Will you come to-morrow?"

"Not to-morrow, daddy. Monday or Tuesday."

"Is that a promise, Sonia?"

Sullenly she repeated, "I suppose so."

Then she heard him cry, "I'm so worried about you."

"Nothing to worry about."

But there was unutterable pathos in his good-by.

Sonia replaced the receiver and brushed the tears from

"He is the most ridiculous, sentimental idiot that ever lived. And never in the wide world will he understand this marriage of mine. I won't dare let any other man come near the place."

* * *

Sunday was a long day. The papers gave no additional information. Sonia, restless and disturbed, would have liked to go to the dunes again. But she did not wish to suggest it to Franklin. He came for her late in the afternoon and they took a short drive. The deferred separation, together with Henderson's death, had dampened their ardor. He kissed her mournfully, as those who kiss who may die before they meet again.

"Mother and I are leaving this week."

"Really?" Sonia asked, dully.

"There was no reason why she should remain if she could not be with him.

Monday both of them were summoned to the inquest for Walter Henderson. Sonia dreaded it. She had never been in a morgue. The mere thought of the place terrified her. Ghastly tales floated into her mind—bodies kept on ice for months waiting to be identified... Her flesh prickled at the thought.

She wished Franklin would go with her, but he said it would look better if he accompanied the other men from the office. For some silly, undefinable reason his refusal, sensible as it was, hurt.

She braced herself with several cups of coffee. A morgue! Ugh! She could not bear it. But she went, alone!

She was surprised to see so many people there. Jed Thomas, Bertie, Franklin and another salesman, the dead man's housekeeper, the fisherman who had found the body, doctors, friends and reporters.

The first witness was the fisherman. With many flourishes he told of finding the body early Saturday afternoon.

The housekeeper, a nervous, distracted little woman, testified that Walter had not been home since Thursday morning.

"Mr. Henderson was a fine gentleman. I've kept house for him many years and his mother before him."

"Had he seemed brooding or melancholy lately?"

"That he did not. He was always cheerful. Most all the time."

"Do you mean there was any time when he was not?"

She twisted her hands admitting. "Well, yes, sir, there was....."

"When was it?"

"One day, some time ago, New Year's day it was. I remember, because he had said he would be out all evening. But he came home about 6 o'clock. I saw him sitting in the library and went in to ask him if he wanted something to eat. He was sitting with that ring in his hand."

"The ring on the table?"

"Yes, sir. And he says, 'Ella—he always called me Ella—'Ella', —he says, 'this damned ring has brought me nothing but bad luck.'"

Sonia stirred and the color swept into her face. Those had been his exact words to her.

324 farm housewives say: "This eases tired backs"

WHAT a fresh, wholesome, healthy-looking class of women the farm housewives are! They fly from one task to another with the quickness and suppleness that so many women lose with their first youth.

Yet, if you ask, most of them will confess that often their backs are lame—their feet and ankles aching with fatigue.

We inquired around among farm housewives to find out what they do to relieve the aching and stiffness in overtired muscles, and to take care of the countless small hurts that are always happening around the farm home.

324 of them said that they found Sloan's the very best remedy they can use.

Used everywhere for muscular pain

In one out of every three homes you'll find Sloan's Liniment the standby for every kind of muscular ache, for rheumatism, for colds and chest congestions and for all kinds of minor injuries.

The farm housewife has learned that she can ease tired, aching muscles with Sloan's

Read this letter from a farm housewife telling of quick relief from an injury:

"I fell out of a cherry tree. The branch I was on broke and I fell fourteen feet. I hurt my hip and I suffered agony. I used Sloan's, and I don't even feel it any more. I think Sloan's is splendid."

And this—telling the help that Sloan's gave to a persistent case of muscular pain:

"I could not sleep or do my work, but now I sleep well, walk and do my work with ease. I used Sloan's Liniment only once and it relieved me of my pain. It is just wonderful."

* * *

Sloan's works by the quickest, most effective method known for relieving pain. It stirs up the circulation—sends a healing tide of fresh, germ-destroying blood direct to the spot that hurts—gives you quick, positive relief.

Always keep a bottle of Sloan's Liniment on hand. At your druggist's you can get one that lasts a long time for 35 cents. Use it for:

We find that Sloan's gives them quick, positive relief."*

"No, suh," replied the floor-sweeper. "No paper today. Everybody's out hunting fo' dat dog."

Every Cold is Serious

Any cold is serious enough when its dreadful possibilities are considered, but when there is soreness or tightness in the chest and a dry hard cough you can look for bronchitis, which is often confused with an ordinary cold.

It is usually known by aching limbs and body pains, chilly feelings, weariness and weakness, pain in the chest and a tight, tearing cough. Fever, dry skin, thirst, coated tongue and constipation are other symptoms.

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine seems almost like a specific for bronchitis because it is so successful in loosening up the cough, aiding expectoration and preventing the inflammation from reaching the lungs.
