Inman-Pilgrim Nuptials

A pretty Christmas wedding was solemnized at the United Church, Montague, P.E.I. on Saturday, December 21st at 8 p.m. when the Rev. A. S. Adams united in marriage Rhoda Mary Pilgrim of Port, Ontario, daughter of Mrs. Wm. Pilgrim of Clarkson Ontario, to Wilfred Nelson Inman, son of Mrs. G. S. Inman and the late Judge Inman.

The bride, who was given in marriage by Mr. Manning Barnall of Charlottetown, looked charming in a dressmaker suit of champagne blue, with grey accessories and corsage of Tallman roses. Her only jewelry was the groom's gift - a string of pearls. Mrs. G. S. Inman, dressed in a street length gown of dove grey with black accessories and a corsage of Prosperity roses, attended the bride as matron-of-honour, while Mr. G. S. Inman supported his brother.

The groom's mother chose for her son's wedding black tulle trimmed with colored sequins and corsage of American Beauty roses. Miss Agnes Inman played the wedding music and Mr. William Garrack during the singing of the nuptial hymn, "A Beautiful Rendition of 'I'll Walk Beside You'." The ushers were Mr. Milton Campbell and Mr. Eric McKinnon.

After the ceremony, a reception was held in the Pool Hotel which was tastefully decorated in keeping with the holiday season. A beautiful three-tiered wedding cake was served, followed by a refreshment table, where Mrs. Manning Barnall poured coffee. Mrs. C. Craswell, Mrs. Walter M. Bear, Mrs. L. Poole, Mrs. J. P. Rev. Mrs. Carl Beames and Mrs. W. L. Bear served.

The Rev. Mr. Adams proposed the toast to the bride and the groom responded, thanking the guests for their good wishes. The bride then responded, thanking the guests for their presence and the groom's love. The bride and groom then departed for their honeymoon trip. (Toronto papers please copy.)

The Life-Story of H.R.H. Princess Elizabeth

By ARTHUR NETTLETON, F. R. G. S.

As the news went round the globe, messages of congratulations poured in from both the Dominions and elsewhere. Every angle of the "story" was covered by the Press. The world was interested to learn that the baby Princess, even at the age of a few months, displayed a close resemblance to her grandmother, Queen Mary, that she was to be called Elizabeth Alexandra Mary, and that she was already showing a strong individuality. Her christening took place in the private chapel at Buckingham Palace, and the sponsors were King George the Fifth, Queen Mary, the Princess Royal, the Duke of Connaught, and the Earl and Countess of Strathmore. Royal baptisms are always somewhat elaborate affairs, and the ceremony on this occasion closely followed traditions. The Princess wore a robe of Brussels lace which itself was historical, for it had been worn on similar occasions by other royal babies during the previous one-hundred years. Tradition was also preserved by the use of the small gold baptismal font from the River Jordan for the event. The Archbishop of Canterbury, who by statutory right is entitled to perform the ceremony, performed the ceremony. Princess Elizabeth may be said to have started, on this very early occasion in her life, a new royal fashion: previously, royal babies were usually baptised at Windsor, King Edward the Seventh and King George the Fifth were both christened there. But since Princess Elizabeth's baptism at Buckingham Palace, this royal residence has become the favourite place for such ceremonies. Several of her royal cousins, including the children of the late Duke of Kent, were later christened there.

The Princess and her parents were making No. 17, Bruton Street their temporary home, and a nursery was established in a room overlooking Grosvenor Street, a light and airy apartment carefully chosen and furnished by Queen Elizabeth. An earlier proposal to have the nursery at the front of the house was vetoed because already the popularity of the golden-haired little Princess was tending to cause obstruction in the street. At almost every hour of the day, sightseers converged upon Bruton Street, hoping to catch a glimpse of the royal baby. Indeed, so eager were they to see her that she was nearly mobbed when taken out for an airing. It was partly these demonstrations, gratifying though they were in the eyes of the people, which led King George and Queen Elizabeth to buy a Town house of their own, a London residence where privacy for the Princess would be easier to obtain. The choice was not easy to make, and meanwhile the Princess was taken to Glamis Castle, the Scottish home of the Earl and Countess of Strathmore.

There she spent the summer months, away from the publicity which her presence in London had caused. The move was in accordance with Queen Elizabeth's insistence that a young child, no matter whether a royal personage or not, is entitled to a carefree childhood. "It is the birthright of a baby" she declared, "and I want my daughter to have that birthright." The onus of her position will be imposed upon her soon enough! Yet the world, while endorsing and respecting those sentiments, continued to express its admiration for the Princess in various ways. Her illness of her capricious face and curly hair appeared, for instance, on Newfoundland stamps - a gesture of loyalty that symbolized general Empire interest in her. Newfoundland being Britain's oldest colony. The latest addition to the Empire at that time, too, was named after her, a stretch of Antarctica being called Princess Elizabeth's Land when the British flag was first unfurled there. Framed photographs of H.R.H. appeared in homes in every country giving allegiance to the British Crown. America "glamorised" her no less. It is no secret that these expressions of loyalty and interest, while generally pleasing the Royal Family, were something of a complication in the upbringing of the little girl who was their focal point. While public interest had to be satisfied, the Queen's unshakable decision to give Princess Elizabeth a happy, unhampered childhood had to be fulfilled. A compromise was effected by frequently circulating to the world a few photographs of the Princess, and with the help of these the world's appetite for information about her was partly satisfied. The same idea has been continued throughout the Princess's life, and today there are numerous excellent outdoor camera portraits of her. Princess Elizabeth has been a happy, unhampered childhood.
