De Marigny Trial Is Continued

NASSAU, Bahamas, Nov. 8 — (AP) — A principal defence witness, Marcus Georges De Visdelou, ran a crown prosecutor armed with a surprise document today and found himself in a confused confusion before he finished his story of Alfred De Marigny's activities on the night Sir Harry Oakes was slain in July.

Moving swiftly toward the end of De Marigny's trial for the murder of his father in law, the defence then matched the word of one American police captain against another in an effort to discredit the fingerprint offered by the Crown as evidence that the defendant was present when the wealthy gold miner was beaten on the head and set afire.

The defence expects to rest its case tomorrow, with 19 year old Nancy De Marigny, eldest daughter of Sir Harry and De Marigny's wife as the final witness.

De Visdelou, who has known De Marigny since they were boys together on the Indian Ocean island of Mauritius, was called upon to support the accused man's story that De Marigny was in bed at the time Sir Harry was attacked in his seaside estate, Westbourne, five miles away.

Previous witnesses have set the time of Sir Harry's death at between 1.30 and 3.30 A. M. July 8, and De Visdelou recalled under oath that he talked to De Marigny in the cottage they shared at 1.30 A. M., and that about 3.15 was asked by the latter to put out his car.

But special prosecutor A. F. Adger suddenly opened up a surprising statement De Visdelou had given to police July 11, and read his excerpt.

"I actually did not see De Marigny from midnight until the following morning." "I am French and very emotional," said De Visdelou in explanation. "I was very nervous then."

Chief Justice Sir Oscar Bedford Daily grew impatient when De Visdelou said that his police statement about his early life in London and Paris was correct.

"How can you go through all that about Paris and London," he demanded, "but become vague on happenings only a couple of days old?"

"I now give you an opportunity to explain how your memory became vague on the happenings of July 8." "I cannot explain, your honor," said the flustered witness.

Chief Defence Attorney Godfrey Higgs came to his aid by reading a paragraph from the police statement which Adger had not quoted.

"About 1.30 De Marigny came upstairs and asked if he could take my girl friend home."

"Did you say that?" the chief justice asked.

"Yes, I said that," came the reply.

Higgs interposed a question: "The only statement you don't recollect is that of the cat?"

"Yes, about the cat," said De Visdelou.

"You are not saying this just to support the case of the accused?" asked the chief justice.

Canuck Airmen Widen Scope Of Participation

LONDON, Nov. 8 — (CP Cable) — The widening scope of Canadian participation in all phases of the air war against Germany was disclosed tonight with official announcement that Wing Cmdr George H. Elms of Whitby, Ont. has been placed in charge of a newly-formed squadron of night-fighting Mosquito planes flown by Canadian airmen.

The announcement followed har on the heels of disclosure last week that a Canadian squadron under Group Capt. John Fauguet of Canada is part of the pathfinder force which blazes the way for increasingly-heavy R.A.F. and G.A.F. bomber blows against the Reich.

The fact that Mosquitoes which carry heavy stings and reach speeds up to more than 400 miles an hour are being used as night fighters to combat the newest German fighter-bombers making nuisance raids on Britain was released by the Air Ministry only last week.

The Canadians under Elms are credited with destroying 5 1-2 German planes since the squadron was formed and Elms himself shot out of the sky in a dogfight with the Canadians had been in action "almost nightly" during recent German raids on London.

Their work has been patrolling the channel and the North Sea or coastal regions of Nazi-occupied western Europe.

Besides their toll of German aircraft, the R.C.A.F. Mosquito pilots have been playing a part in disrupting German communications. They have disabled 35 trains and shot up a dozen barges. Also, said the statement, "they have done much on enemy territory in more than a score of sorties" presumably to Berlin as well as to other German centres.

One of Elms' section leaders is Sqdn. Ldr. Ian Anderson March of St. John's, Nfld.

DO YOU KNOW?

THAT the children of Britain are still in need of milk... malnutrition and undernourishment as a result of the air blitz has left their health at a low ebb;

THAT a steady flow of milk from Canada is necessary to save the lives of many of these unfortunate children;

THAT complacency is threatening to let people forget that there is still a great need for carrying on this humanitarian work.

Here's How You Can Help--

Get solidly behind the public subscription to raise $10,000 to send milk to the British children. This campaign opens Monday next, November 15th.

Collectors will be busy through Prince Edward Island. Greet them with a cheery smile and an open purse.
