THE WORK OF COUGHING

If you cough once every fifteen minutes for ten hours you expend energy equivalent to two hundred and fifty units of heat, which is equivalent to the nourishment contained in three eggs or two glasses of milk. So says a German who has specialized on the waste of energy in coughing.

At a normal rate we expel air from the chest at the rate of four feet per second, but in violent coughing we expel it at the rate of three hundred feet a second. Thus a persistent cough not only weakens the constitution, but it is a direct cause of emaciation according to the same authority. Such weighty statistics lead to a reiteration of the oft-repeated injunction "never neglect a cough."—Popular Science Monthly.

GIRLS FIND WORK MAKING AEROPLANES

A few girls during the past week have found positions in aeroplane factories. Like the girls in munition factories and on the land—indeed in many other lines of work—they have the satisfaction of knowing that they, too, are helping towards winning the war.

The positions referred to were filled through the Ontario Government Employment Bureau. Through the week altogether they had 224 applications for work, 216 of these being for munitions. Applications from employers for workers numbered 299. Of these 192 were from munition firms. Two hundred and forty-eight were referred to positions, and 93 were reported as secured. Of these, the big majority were in munition factories. Three were for work in an aeroplane factory and two were for telephone operators.

The branch of the department for sending workers to farms, recently sent six young girls to farms at Niagara. Reports from the girls and the farmers are most satisfactory. The girls need all their grit and determination, for they start work early, and they keep at it all the day. They are working on the vegetable gardens, hoeing or doing whatever is necessary.

In the campaign being undertaken to get girls and women to help in the farm houses, especially at harvest time, the Women's Institutes will play an important part. Applications are being sent from the Government Department of Trades and Labor to the farmers for the latter to sign if they want workers. Presidents or secretaries of the Women's Institutes will sign these applications before they are returned here, certifying that the farmer is a reliable person.

MME. BERNHARDT CHARMS STILL AT 72

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—Sitting in the orchestra seats watching Mme. Sarah Bernhardt as the Duc de Reichstadt in the last act of "L'Aiglon," it seems almost incredible that the world-famous French actress will celebrate her seventy-third birthday on Oct. 23. On Nov. 8 it will be thirty-seven years since Sarah Bernhardt made her first appearance in America under the Abbey management in "Aldienne Lecouvreur," when she had seventeen curtain calls after the second act.

The same brilliancy of the magic eyes and the wonderful voice is still to the fore at the Knickerbocker Theatre in "L'Aiglon," but Madame is much stouter than she was thirty-seven years ago. This is due chiefly to her attacks of sciatica, which commenced ten years ago, and culminated in the operation at Bordeaux. Previous to that Mme. Bernhardt retained her sylph-like figure by her work at the theatre and athletic exercises between the performances.

Not satisfied with two performances a day, including Sundays, with rehearsals in between, the "Divine Sarah," as she is affectionately known all over Europe, would find time to go out shooting jaguars, alligators, leopards, condors, or other wild animals or birds, according to the country she was in. Her slowness was so remarkable in 1880 that when she arrived at the stage door of the Odeon for her last rehearsal before sailing for New York the Figaro stated emphatically: "An empty carriage drew up at the door of the Odeon and Mme. Sarah Bernhardt descended."

Regrets Stage is Losing Caste

Next to her beloved France, she is wrapped up in her art, and her chief regret is that the stage is losing caste through the vogue of the moving pictures, and also because young people will not take the time to study the finer technique and ethics of the legitimate profession as they were compelled by a critical public to do in her young days in Paris. In spite of the fact that Madame Bernhardt has recently recovered from an illness that brought her almost to the gates of death, she has not relinquished one jot of her arduous work with the company organized by W. F. Connor in 1916 for a tour of the United States. It is Sarah Bernhardt who tells the young French actors and actresses how they must act their roles. Her word is final on the stage and in the dressing room, even to the hanging of the robes she wears in the various plays, and the packing away of her cherished jewels with their cherished historical associations.

Her physician is always in constant attendance at the back of the stage at the Knickerbocker Theatre, with his familiar expression, "Mais, Madame, je vous prie!" but it is of no avail.

Sarah Bernhardt does as she has always done—follows her own free will. If there is any human being who can influence the great actress it is her charming granddaughter, Lysiane, the child of her beloved son, Maurice, who is in her twenty-first year. She is going on a tour with Mme. Bernhardt next Sunday, after her parents have sailed for France. Mme. Bernhardt commences her day in her suite at the Hotel Savoy at 8.30 o'clock every morning, when her maid brings in coffee and rolls, with fresh fruit. At 10.30 she is dressed and ready to drive to the Knickerbocker Theatre to rehearse excerpts from her lengthy repertoire with the new members of her company, who have been sent over from Paris. At 12.30 she is back at the Savoy to receive her guests for luncheon, the only meal to which invitations are given.

After luncheon Mme. Bernhardt rests for an hour and is then driven to the theatre for the matinee performance. Sometimes the rehearsals have to be repeated in the afternoon, often at her own insistence, and she will attend them as they were part of the ordinary routine of her daily life. Neither Mr. Connor, nor the good old French doctor can stop Sarah Bernhardt from doing what she believes to be the proper thing to do. Yet one must not say, (non, non, non!) that Madame is a little impetuous sometimes.

In travelling to and from the stage in her limousine the famous French actress is always accompanied by her Airedale terrier "Buster," and she carries a bunch of violets, her favorite flowers, in her hand.

Predicts Germans Beaten by May

In an interview in her dressing room at the theatre last night after her remarkable impersonation of the Duc de Reichstadt in the last act of "L'Aiglon," while seeing to her dresses with her English secretary, Miss Elizabeth Ormsby, she said that the great hope of her life was to be in Paris when peace was proclaimed.

"I am going back to France next May," Mme. Bernhardt continued, and by that time, the Allies, with the valuable aid of the American army, will have vanquished the boches. I believe that victory would have been won this year if it had not been for the actions of the Russians, who fell at the supreme moment and cost France so many of her brave sons in the Champagne. That was a chance for the Germans, was it not? They are always getting chances, those people without God!

MADE HER THINK

She saw her husband take a piece of paper from his pocket, put it in an envelope, and furtively place it in a far corner of a drawer in his desk. For a whole day she kept away from it, then her fingers itched past hearing.

"After all," she murmured, as her hand slid into the drawer, "it is my duty to find out and help him with his troubles. 'In his wife'."

She opened it and read: "I'll bet you a new hat that your curiosity will not allow you to leave this alone."

Now she's wondering how she can claim that hat without giving herself away.

HE SUCCUMBED

"A couple," said Mrs. Simpkins, "got married a few days ago after a courtship which had lasted fifty years. 'I suppose,' replied Mr. Simpkins, 'the poor old man had become too feeble to hold out any longer.'"
