

For ECZEMA try
Sootha-Salva
The Guaranteed
Soothing Healing Ointment

Mortgage Sale

Take notice that under and by virtue of the powers of sale contained in a certain Mortgage or Deed of Trust dated the twenty-fourth day of January A. D. 1924, made between J. & T. Morris Company Limited of the first part, and The Maritime Trust Corporation of the second part, there will be offered for sale by Public Auction on the premises Nos. 75 to 79 Water Street in Charlottetown, on Monday the sixteenth day of July A. D. 1928, at the hour of eleven o'clock in the forenoon, the following property, namely:

All that tract, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in Charlottetown aforesaid, bounded as follows: On the Southeast by Water Street, on the Southwest by property now or lately owned by W. W. Owen (formerly used as Telegraph Office), on the Northeast by property of Charles H. B. Leungworth, and on the Northwest by the Robins Estate.

Also all that other parcel of land in Charlottetown bounded as follows: On the Northwest by Water Street, on the Southwest by property of De Blois Bros., on the Northeast by property of the Labor Union, and on the Southeast by property of Bruce Stewart & Co.

Also all the personal property of J. & T. Morris Company Limited, comprising the machinery, plant equipment, office furniture, stock-in-trade, bottles, containers, boxes, cans, sponges, materials and supplies used in connection with its business, beers, aerated waters and drinks manufactured or in process of manufacture, formulae, trademarks, trade names, book-debts, and all other fixtures, utensils, goods, chattels effects and assets now owned, or which at the time of such sale may be owned by the said J. & T. Morris Company Limited.

Terms of sale to be twenty per cent cash at the time of sale, and the balance within thirty days after the date of sale.

Dated this fourteenth day of May 1928.

The Maritime Trust Corporation, by
MCLEOD & BENTLEY,
Their Attorneys.

NOTICE

The Auction Sale of Wilnot Large which was postponed will be held on the premises at Albany on Thursday, June 14th at one o'clock.

6-12-31.

AUCTION SALE

I am instructed by Francis Haughey to sell by auction on the Premises at Kelly's Cross on Friday, June 15th, A. D. 1928, his farm, consisting of 65 acres of No. 1 Land all clear and in a good state of cultivation. Also all his household furniture. Sale positive as owner is leaving the Province.

JOHN P. BRADLEY
Auctioneer.

4953-6-8-9-13.

NOTICE

We, the undersigned merchants of Montague, Lower Montague and Kilmuir, agree to close our respective places of business at 6 o'clock P. M. (Saturday excepted) from Monday, June 11th, 1928 to Friday, September 14th, both dates inclusive, also Wednesday afternoons at one o'clock P. M. during the same period. We also agree to close July 2nd (Dominion Day).

Poole & Thompson, Limited.
L. H. Poole, President.
J. W. Murdoch & Company.
McLeod & McGregor.
E. E. Parkman.
J. L. Younker.
McGowan's Limited, Kilmuir.
W. A. Poole & Company, Lower Montague, (close on Wednesday at one o'clock after June 30th.)
T. G. Ives, Limited, per T. G. Ives, Wright & Stewart.
6-9-41.

AT STUD

PRINCE BARON IMPORTED
1109881 (163827)

This handsome dapple Grey Percheron Stallion will make the season at the owners stables, Vernon River, except Thursday of each week when he will be at Wm. H. Wood's, Pownal. This horse needs no puffing as his colts speak for themselves.

TERMS $10 for the season. Mares at owners risk.
HENRY WOOD,
Owner in Charge.
6-6-28-41.

AT STUD

GOLDEN AUBREY
4346

REGISTERED STANDARD TROTTER
WEIGHT 1125

GOLDEN AUBREY sired by "CAPTAIN AUBREY" First Dam by Kalol, second Dam by "All Right," third Dam, "Minnie Grey," by "Harry Morgan," fourth Dam by Jacques Cartier, fifth Dam by "Noble." The farther back on go the better they get.

For size, style, action, speed and endurance, get the "Peter the Great" crossed with "Morgan."

GOLDEN AUBREY will stand for the summer of 1928 at his stable at St. Peters.

Season $10.00

JOSEPH H. CHEVERIE, C. E. PRATT & SON,
In Charge. Owners.

"Jealous Hearts"

By
MILDRED BARBOUR

THE VERDICT.

Farraday never forgot the afternoon and evening that followed Elinor's audition at the Opera, or the luncheon, at which the great impresario had given his final verdict. As soon as he had spoken, Elinor, without a word, left the table. Set of face, haggard, with a look that made Farraday's heart sink, she had risen abruptly and swept across the restaurant.

For once, she was unconscious of the stares of the curious, of voices that whispered: "Look! There's Elinor Carver, the singer."

Farraday got to his feet. His eyes betrayed his anxiety. He turned to the great man, with something like reproach in his manner.

The latter shrugged.

"Spare the children from suffering from worms by using Miller's Worm Powders, a most effective vermifuge with which to combat these insidious foes of the young and helpless. It is an excellent worm destroyer, and when its qualities become known in a household, no other will be used. The medicine acts by itself, requiring no purgative to assist it, and so thoroughly that nothing more is desired."

It's better, my friend, that she has the truth. Better the truth than a delusion that will lead her like a will-o'-the-wisp, waste her life, and betray her—in the end."

Farraday hesitated.

"It's pretty brutal."

The impresario only smiled. "I was truthful," he said.

Farraday hurried in pursuit of Elinor. He found her sitting in a taxi that the doorman had summoned, staring straight ahead of her into the gray drizzle, while both the doorman and the chauffeur asked where she wished to be taken. Their questions seemed to fall on deaf ears.

Farraday got into the car and said a few perfunctory words to her. But she wasn't even listening. It is doubtful if she had heard a word since the great man had told her that her hopes for an operatic career were vain.

She seemed to be listening, over and over, to his measured, careful words:

"You will never be a prima donna, Mademoiselle. Your voice is true, but it has no feeling. There is no human emotion—joy or sorrow or sacrifice—back of the words you sing so charmingly. Take my advice: don't strive after the impossible. Stick to what you're doing so well. You will never be better than you are today. Tomorrow, and the day after, and the day after that, and so on through the years, you will be worse."

Farraday had scarcely led her in to the tiny drawing-room of her hotel suite before she had hysterics. She laughed and cried and shrieked and tore her hair. After a few minutes, the green velvet turban as a crumpled mass in one corner. She wrenched her gown away from her throat, as though she were stillicated; and the pearls, their string broken by her clutching fingers, had rolled here and there over the floor.

Farraday rang for a maid, and, when they two failed to calm her, a physician was sent for. He gave her a sedative and prescribed complete rest and quiet.

"She's had a severe shock," Farraday explained, in a low voice, but not so low that Elinor didn't catch his words. She laughed, and Farraday winced at the sound. He had never heard a laugh like that—it was like a mocking echo of dead hope, dead joy; it was the death-knell of the spirit.

Even the doctor was startled. He looked at Elinor sharply and changed his prescription.

"If she wants to talk, let her," Elinor did want to talk. The tablets the physician had given her had steadied her and set her brain to working feverishly.

"Don't go, Jim," she said abruptly. "I'll be back presently." Then she went into her bedroom and closed the door. A chambermaid cleared away the disorder in the little salon. Some flowers had come from one of Elinor's admirers, and she put them in a vase and laid the card beside it, with a tinge of awe. The card bore the imprint of a coronet and a name that was famous throughout Europe.

Elinor returned presently. She was wearing a gold brocade garment, with edgings of sable, half negligee, half tea-gown. Her feet were thrust into gold brocade slippers. Her copper-colored hair had been brushed until its sultry splendor flamed anew. She wore a ring and a necklace of emeralds. She

MT. STEWART SCHOOL
Primary Dept., Grade V-1 Edson Affleck 2 Boyd McDonald 3 Barron McDonald
Grade IV-1 Florence Martin 2 Gilbert Timmins 3 Howard McDonald
Grade III-1 Stella Affleck 2 Johnnie Smallwood.
Grade II Senior-1 Roy Clark 2 Lorne Smith 3 Ralph Garnham.
Grade II Junior-1 Ruth Glover 2 Alexandra Martin 3 Kenneth Charman.
Grade I Senior-1 Evelyn McIntyre 2 Martin Birt 3 Bessie Smallwood and Lotie Jay (equal)
Grade I (Junior)-1 Laia McLeod 2 Bessie Clark 3 Bernice Dunn.
Grade I (a)-1 Claude Affleck.
Principal's Dept., Grade VIII -1 Mary McAskill 2 Allister Martin 3 Alice Martin.
Grade VII -1 Margaret McLeod 2 Frank McLeod 3 Helen MacDonald.
Grade VI-1 Ida Clark 2 Harold MacDonald 3 Marjorie Affleck.

didn't look beaten, except for her eyes.

Farraday lowered his own, that she might not read the pity in them. There was something pathetic about the sight of her magnificence. It was as though, with the flame of her hopes quenched before her eyes, she sought to warm herself with material substitutes—all that were left to her.

"Well, Jim," she said, with a forced lightness, "I guess that's that! Oh, don't try to be sympathetic. I interrupted impatiently, as he started to speak. "I can't stand it. She walked to the mantel and leaned the elbow on it. If she saw the flowers and the card, she gave no sign.

"So, it's been an idle dream, after all?" she went on, in a low voice, as if she spoke only to herself. "All this time, I've only been fooling myself by thinking that I was a success. I'm nothing, according to your brutally frank friend, but a third-rate concert singer. I belong in the music-halls, in vaudeville!" She laughed harshly.

"Elinor!" Farraday pleaded. "You don't have to take his verdict—"

She swung round on him savagely.

"Why not?" she demanded. "He's the authority in Europe, isn't he?" Farraday admitted that he was.

"And he said," Elinor went on, the fire suddenly having left her voice, "he said that I hadn't a trace of human feeling in my being. He said I could sing 'Mimi,' 'Butterfly,' 'Gilda,' 'Carmen,' or 'Aida,' with mechanical perfection. But I couldn't put any sweetness into 'Mimi,' any pathos into 'Butterfly,' or any thrill into 'Carmen.' And I thought I could act!" she ended bitterly.

"You can act, Elinor. That's just the point," said Farraday. "With you, it's all acting—never feeling."

Her lip curled.

"Even you!" she murmured.

"Forgive me. I wouldn't hurt you for the world."

She laughed drearily.

"Go ahead. Nothing will hurt now. I'm numb."

She began to prowl restlessly around the room. Her eyes had a dazed look.

"What's the matter with me, anyway?" she flung at him finally.

"Tell me!"

"He said—" Farraday referred to the impresario—"that you couldn't feel, because you had never really cared for any one in all your life; that you'd never known sorrow or disappointment or regret or sacrifice—or love."

"Love!" Elinor snapped her fingers impatiently. "Men have been in love with me since I wore pinafores."

"But you've never loved any one of them. Elinor," Farraday said gently.

She paused in her prowling, as if a hand had reached out and stopped her; her head lifted, as if at a call; her eyes widened, as if she saw a vision. Her lips parted.

(To Be Continued.)

didn't look beaten, except for her eyes.

Farraday lowered his own, that she might not read the pity in them. There was something pathetic about the sight of her magnificence. It was as though, with the flame of her hopes quenched before her eyes, she sought to warm herself with material substitutes—all that were left to her.

"Well, Jim," she said, with a forced lightness, "I guess that's that! Oh, don't try to be sympathetic. I interrupted impatiently, as he started to speak. "I can't stand it. She walked to the mantel and leaned the elbow on it. If she saw the flowers and the card, she gave no sign.

"So, it's been an idle dream, after all?" she went on, in a low voice, as if she spoke only to herself. "All this time, I've only been fooling myself by thinking that I was a success. I'm nothing, according to your brutally frank friend, but a third-rate concert singer. I belong in the music-halls, in vaudeville!" She laughed harshly.

"Elinor!" Farraday pleaded. "You don't have to take his verdict—"

She swung round on him savagely.

"Why not?" she demanded. "He's the authority in Europe, isn't he?" Farraday admitted that he was.

"And he said," Elinor went on, the fire suddenly having left her voice, "he said that I hadn't a trace of human feeling in my being. He said I could sing 'Mimi,' 'Butterfly,' 'Gilda,' 'Carmen,' or 'Aida,' with mechanical perfection. But I couldn't put any sweetness into 'Mimi,' any pathos into 'Butterfly,' or any thrill into 'Carmen.' And I thought I could act!" she ended bitterly.

"You can act, Elinor. That's just the point," said Farraday. "With you, it's all acting—never feeling."

Her lip curled.

"Even you!" she murmured.

"Forgive me. I wouldn't hurt you for the world."

She laughed drearily.

"Go ahead. Nothing will hurt now. I'm numb."

She began to prowl restlessly around the room. Her eyes had a dazed look.

"What's the matter with me, anyway?" she flung at him finally.

"Tell me!"

"He said—" Farraday referred to the impresario—"that you couldn't feel, because you had never really cared for any one in all your life; that you'd never known sorrow or disappointment or regret or sacrifice—or love."

"Love!" Elinor snapped her fingers impatiently. "Men have been in love with me since I wore pinafores."

"But you've never loved any one of them. Elinor," Farraday said gently.

She paused in her prowling, as if a hand had reached out and stopped her; her head lifted, as if at a call; her eyes widened, as if she saw a vision. Her lips parted.

(To Be Continued.)

didn't look beaten, except for her eyes.

Farraday lowered his own, that she might not read the pity in them. There was something pathetic about the sight of her magnificence. It was as though, with the flame of her hopes quenched before her eyes, she sought to warm herself with material substitutes—all that were left to her.

"Well, Jim," she said, with a forced lightness, "I guess that's that! Oh, don't try to be sympathetic. I interrupted impatiently, as he started to speak. "I can't stand it. She walked to the mantel and leaned the elbow on it. If she saw the flowers and the card, she gave no sign.

"So, it's been an idle dream, after all?" she went on, in a low voice, as if she spoke only to herself. "All this time, I've only been fooling myself by thinking that I was a success. I'm nothing, according to your brutally frank friend, but a third-rate concert singer. I belong in the music-halls, in vaudeville!" She laughed harshly.

"Elinor!" Farraday pleaded. "You don't have to take his verdict—"

She swung round on him savagely.

"Why not?" she demanded. "He's the authority in Europe, isn't he?" Farraday admitted that he was.

"And he said," Elinor went on, the fire suddenly having left her voice, "he said that I hadn't a trace of human feeling in my being. He said I could sing 'Mimi,' 'Butterfly,' 'Gilda,' 'Carmen,' or 'Aida,' with mechanical perfection. But I couldn't put any sweetness into 'Mimi,' any pathos into 'Butterfly,' or any thrill into 'Carmen.' And I thought I could act!" she ended bitterly.

"You can act, Elinor. That's just the point," said Farraday. "With you, it's all acting—never feeling."

Her lip curled.

"Even you!" she murmured.

"Forgive me. I wouldn't hurt you for the world."

She laughed drearily.

"Go ahead. Nothing will hurt now. I'm numb."

She began to prowl restlessly around the room. Her eyes had a dazed look.

"What's the matter with me, anyway?" she flung at him finally.

"Tell me!"

"He said—" Farraday referred to the impresario—"that you couldn't feel, because you had never really cared for any one in all your life; that you'd never known sorrow or disappointment or regret or sacrifice—or love."

"Love!" Elinor snapped her fingers impatiently. "Men have been in love with me since I wore pinafores."

"But you've never loved any one of them. Elinor," Farraday said gently.

She paused in her prowling, as if a hand had reached out and stopped her; her head lifted, as if at a call; her eyes widened, as if she saw a vision. Her lips parted.

(To Be Continued.)

didn't look beaten, except for her eyes.

Farraday lowered his own, that she might not read the pity in them. There was something pathetic about the sight of her magnificence. It was as though, with the flame of her hopes quenched before her eyes, she sought to warm herself with material substitutes—all that were left to her.

"Well, Jim," she said, with a forced lightness, "I guess that's that! Oh, don't try to be sympathetic. I interrupted impatiently, as he started to speak. "I can't stand it. She walked to the mantel and leaned the elbow on it. If she saw the flowers and the card, she gave no sign.

"So, it's been an idle dream, after all?" she went on, in a low voice, as if she spoke only to herself. "All this time, I've only been fooling myself by thinking that I was a success. I'm nothing, according to your brutally frank friend, but a third-rate concert singer. I belong in the music-halls, in vaudeville!" She laughed harshly.

"Elinor!" Farraday pleaded. "You don't have to take his verdict—"

She swung round on him savagely.

"Why not?" she demanded. "He's the authority in Europe, isn't he?" Farraday admitted that he was.

"And he said," Elinor went on, the fire suddenly having left her voice, "he said that I hadn't a trace of human feeling in my being. He said I could sing 'Mimi,' 'Butterfly,' 'Gilda,' 'Carmen,' or 'Aida,' with mechanical perfection. But I couldn't put any sweetness into 'Mimi,' any pathos into 'Butterfly,' or any thrill into 'Carmen.' And I thought I could act!" she ended bitterly.

"You can act, Elinor. That's just the point," said Farraday. "With you, it's all acting—never feeling."

Her lip curled.

"Even you!" she murmured.

"Forgive me. I wouldn't hurt you for the world."

She laughed drearily.

"Go ahead. Nothing will hurt now. I'm numb."

She began to prowl restlessly around the room. Her eyes had a dazed look.

"What's the matter with me, anyway?" she flung at him finally.

"Tell me!"

"He said—" Farraday referred to the impresario—"that you couldn't feel, because you had never really cared for any one in all your life; that you'd never known sorrow or disappointment or regret or sacrifice—or love."

"Love!" Elinor snapped her fingers impatiently. "Men have been in love with me since I wore pinafores."

"But you've never loved any one of them. Elinor," Farraday said gently.

She paused in her prowling, as if a hand had reached out and stopped her; her head lifted, as if at a call; her eyes widened, as if she saw a vision. Her lips parted.

(To Be Continued.)

not plant before June. Perennials and Biennials are hardy plant when ground is fit—now! Early Cabbage and Cauliflower from May 20th to June 31. Tomatoes and Celery not before June. Late Cabbage, Cauliflower and Celery from June 20th to July 31st or later. Please take notice that we will not accept an order by mail, express or freight for less than two dollars. This can be arranged by having a neighbor or two to join in the order, when requiring small quantities. Our terms are cash with order.

Annual bedding flower plants—Aster, Phlox, Stocks, Petunia, Verbena, Zinnia, Balsam, Salpiglossis, Scabiosa, Snapdragon, Cosmos, Marigold, Alyssum, Golden Feather, Geranium, Kochia, above 25c doz. prepaid.

Seedling Fanny, Sweet William, Forgetmenot, and seedling Carnation at 50c per doz.

Wintered over Perennials and Biennials—Fanny, Daisy, Sweet William, Forget-me-not $1.20 per dozen. Perennial Larkspur, Digitally or Fox Glove and Canterbury Bells at 25c each, $2.25 per dozen. Double Holyocks, 20c each, $1.75 per doz.

Vegetable Plants—Extra early Cabbage, Cauliflower and Celery, 20c doz. $1.50 per 100. Extra early Tomato, 60c doz. second early 40c doz. late tomato 30c doz. Include 5c doz. for postage. Cucumber, Squash, Pumpkin, Lettuce, Peppers, 25c doz. 5c extra for postage.

Carter's Seed Store, 72-74 Queen Street, W. F. Burke in our old stand east end of market and M. Fraser, Kent and Great George Street handle our plants and fresh plants

MOTHER OF TWINS HELPED

Restored to Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mitchell, Ont.—"I had little twin babies and for quite a while after I was so weak I could not do my work because of pains all the way up my legs at the back. I also had headaches and got very little sleep. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and soon I was able to get up and do my work. I have taken three bottles and I am fine, do my work without trouble and am gaining in weight and strength. I will gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to anyone."

MRS. F. STANTON, Box 220, Mitchell, Ont.

Gay's Plants

Flowers have been so much improved of late that the old time flowers can hardly now be recognized.

Time for planting—Annuals—do

"Women who Drive should know these Tire Facts"

THE more attention you give your tires the more service they will give you in return.

If you abuse them they will cause you a lot of unnecessary expense. If you give them a little care all the time they will deliver all the mileage that was built into them.

Always see that your tires are inflated at the correct pressure. Never run even a short distance on a flat tire. Have tread-cuts repaired promptly.

Drive carefully. Hitting holes or bumps in the pavement, or bumping into the curb when turning or parking—these things are very destructive on tires.

A weekly trip to a tire service station will repay you. The service man will test the tire pressures and examine the treads for cuts, nails and embedded flints that might be forced through when running.

Periodically he should take off the tires—including the spare—and clean the rims and search the tire walls for breaks or bruises.

If you keep these rules you will find driving more enjoyable. You will not be haunted by fear of tire trouble.

Dominion Royal Cord Balloons embody much that you cannot see on the surface. Materials of the highest quality, experienced workmanship, exclusive processes of manufacture developed only after years of research. Latex-treated web cord takes more rubber, but is well worth it in the extra strength and durability it gives to Dominion Royal Cords.

Dominion ROYAL CORD Balloons

CHARLOTTETOWN: W. B. PROWSE & SON, UNIVERSAL MOTORS
MONTAGUE: N. J. NICHOLSON
SUMMERSIDE: R. T. HOLMAN LIMITED, A. HORNE & CO.

We will be pleased to have customers call at our garden, Head of Prince Street and personally select plants. Bring basket or boxes to hold plants.

Wintered over Perennials and Biennials by mail postage must be included to the extent of 25c per address. Write plainly. Remember doz. Early Cabbage, Cauliflower and Celery 20c per 100 for postage. Late Cabbage for planting from the 20th June to 31st July at 40c per 100. 50c prepaid by mail. Large orders should be shipped by express or freight.

If ripe Tomatoes required, order the extra early plants, one dozen will produce ripe fruit for a small family and two dozen will furnish a large family, all the ripe fruit needed.

Do not forget to sign name and address to the extent of 25c per address. Write plainly. Remember doz. Early Cabbage, Cauliflower and Celery 20c per 100 for postage. Late Cabbage for planting from the 20th June to 31st July at 40c per 100. 50c prepaid by mail. Large orders should be shipped by express or freight.

J. J. GAY & SON,
Head of Prince Street,
Charlottetown, P. E. I.
Phone 264.

Last Call for Baby Chicks

Barred Rocks S. C. White Leghorns

8000 Chickens available for the next two weeks. $20.00 per 100. Express prepaid

FROM

Large Typy Hens mated to record of performance. Approved Cockerals of 225 to 295 tgg strains.

REGAL FLOUR

Many Loaves of Superior Bread in Every 98 Pound Bag

REGAL FLOUR

POULTRY MEN

Our Male Birds this year were imported into the Province from some of our very best and oldest Canadian Poultry Breeders. Through the record of Performance Association examined, approved and banded by their Inspectors.

If you need a few high producing Pullets as foundation stock or if you want to secure next years males for breeding purposes remember $5.00 will pay for 25 chicks delivered prepaid to your nearest express station.

S. R. PENDLETON
Kensington, P. E. I.