It has been reported that black ducks are in very good quantity about Pasmure Island Beach during the past two weeks, and many hunters have motored to that locality to take advantage of the excellent shooting. Many hunters from Montague have gone to the Beach, some returning with ducks, and others returning with a cold. On Wednesday of last week, two well known hunters from the community decided to try their luck at the Beach. Concealing themselves behind a clump of bushes their eyes anxiously scanned the lagoon in the gathering dusk. Suddenly to the left was heard the whir of wings as a flock passed out of gunshot range. Resettling themselves, they firmly resolved to nail the first duck that flew overhead — then over the bar came the flock. They rose the gunners to their shoulders flew the guns.

Both fired, one missed entirely, the other's gun fell apart and dropped to the ground amid the explosion. Looking at one another in consternation, the gunners filled the air with imprecations, directed at the blissfully departing ducks, and so once more the would-be nimrods failed in their attempt to bring home the elusive quarry.
