COMMONWEALTH HOTEL

Holds High Reputation For Reception and Entertainment of Guests.

Among the many hosteries of Boston that enjoy a high reputation for the reception and entertainment of their guests, both transient and permanent, none holds a more enviable position in the minds of the public than that of the Commonwealth Hotel on Beacon Hill, of which Storer Francis Crafts, formerly of Beverly, is the proprietor. One of the most centrally located hotels in the city, yet removed from the immediate noise and roar of the busy streets, the accessibility of this house from the great retail stores and places of amusement in the city makes it one of the most popular places of residence in the metropolis.

The Hotel stands on historic ground, the old Beacon Hill of Colonial days, directly facing the Capitol and from the top of its ten-story height a splendid panorama of Boston and its environment rolls itself out like a scroll before the visitor's enraptured eye. Within the doors of the Commonwealth Hotel, which, by the way, is a temperance house of the strictest character, is the building of the American Baptist Association, from which is sent weekly great quantities of goods for the cheering of both the mind and body of homeless people in far-off lands. Missionaries of this denomination, and many others, completing their arrangements for their voyage to remote countries make the Commonwealth their headquarters pending their departure.

During the evangelical campaign of Dr. Chapman, who so ably held in Boston last winter, one of the most successful revivals since the days of Moody and Shaukey, the Commonwealth Hotel has made the headquarters of Dr. Chapman who resided there with his corps of assisting clergymen. At the time of Dr. Chapman's departure, he personally thanked Mr. Crafts for the courtesy and warmth of his hospitality, at the same time presenting to Mr. Crafts a picture of himself, bearing his autograph, as a further testimony of the Doctor's appreciation of Proprietor Crafts many kindnesses. The statement has been made in some quarters that it is impossible to run a hotel profitably without a bar, that is, to conduct a house on strictly temperance principles is sure to result in financial loss. This claim is directly refuted by the unqualified success from the very beginning of the Commonwealth Hotel. The house has never had a bar, nor has intoxicating liquor of any kind ever been sold within its walls. From the very opening of the Hotel business has been exceedingly good, and often hundreds have been turned away, there being no room to accommodate them. The Commonwealth has had a most prosperous past, especially during the year of 1908, enjoying an unprecedented gain in business, old guests come back again.

THEY MIGHT BE WORSE. If all the flies had stingers and if all the dogs were cross, and if all our joys were heartaches and our every gain was loss, and if every day were rainy or if every day were dry, then would there be some slight excuse for one to sit and cry.

If all the trees were winter-killed and all the eggs were stale, and if all the prunes were wormy and if all our plans should fail, and if all the roads were muddy and if all the hills were steep, you would not be so roundly blamed when you sit down and weep.

But house flies are not hornets and most doggies do not bite; two-thirds of what we undertake turns out exactly right; the weather's mostly wholesome, half the eggs we buy are recent; things might be quite a whole lot worse than fully way decent. —Judge.

stantly returning to the house as they came to Boston, bringing with them many new faces, who in turn, brought still more.

Much of the success of the Commonwealth as a family hotel and its popularity among the travelling public, is due to the scrupulous neatness that marks the entire house, and the quiet order and homelike cleanliness that is constantly maintained throughout the hotel.

These matters come under the personal supervision of Mrs. Crafts, wife of the proprietor, by whose able direction the great staff of employees perform their proper duties, and whose gracious presence aids Mr. Crafts in the performance of the social duties of one of the largest hotels in Massachusetts.

The employees and staff of the Hotel are the same as those that were with it on the opening of the House, a fact the traveller looks forward to with pleasure as it pleases those of the public who travel from place to place to be recognized and greeted by members of the staff in the Hotel wherein they make their home, as often those are the only friendly faces they may see in the city.

There are over two hundred rooms in the Commonwealth Hotel and ninety of these have private baths. The house is strictly fireproof, being constructed throughout of stone, with nothing to burn but the doors. Long distance telephones are in every room, and a pair of electrically operated elevators giving constant service day and night. In short, the Commonwealth Hotel is one of the best hotels in Massachusetts for individuals, families to make their home, either transiently or permanently, and although offering extra accommodations and complete service, the arrangement of rates is such that guests are assured of receiving more for their money than in any other house in Boston.—Times, Beverly, Mass.

It plays celt standard or Amberol records—just touch a pretty little lever and you change from standard to Amberol and vice versa—it's simplicity itself. The Fireside is most adaptable to the common home: The price, the size, and the quality—it adapts itself. New Edison Records. Call at our show rooms and hear phonograph perfection. Our show rooms are just the size and kind to perfectly judge a phonograph. You can also hear some of those new records we purchased a short time ago. We selected from what we thought to be the cream of the catalogue. We don't want you to buy—just see what a creditable collection we have for your selection—we know you can't help showing your appreciation.
