"Fine rolling country here, isn't it?"
"Who wants to roll?"

"I notice that your garden doesn't look very promising this year."
"No, every time my husband got to digging in it he found a lot of worms, and they always reminded him of his fishing tackle."

"Is he absolutely honest?"
"Yes, indeed. He wouldn't even take lumber from the new house that is being built next door to his."

Married Quarters

By DAVID LYALL

"Oh, quite; we get right down to it on the eastern side of the estate."
Mrs. Cotman was prevented asking any further questions about Cudham by the arrival of no less than four guests all at once—Mrs. Tomlinson, the dentist's wife, with her daughter; Mrs. Thorpe wife of a solicitor in the town; and Aunt Naomi. Poppy's eyes brightened at the sight of the woman who looked so different from the rest of them. She wore a frock of Quaker grey and a little bonnet with a flowing veil, which was very becoming to her face.

Aunt Naomi nodded across the room to her, but among the bustle of continuous arrival there was no opportunity for speech for some time. Other guests quickly arrived, until the room was quite full, and there was a regular babel of talk. All eyes were focussed on the young bride, and many awkward remarks were made to her.

Naomi Bradford saw by the girl's heightened colour that the ordeal was rather trying for her. Knowing Susan Bradford's love of a good gossip, she saw no chance of Poppy's release for quite a long time; so she decided to intervene. After a time she slipped across the room first to her sister-in-law's side.

"I'm going now, Susan, and I'm to take Poppy. She's had enough. It's very trying to her, having so many people making pointed remarks about her. I don't think it was very wise to bring her here this afternoon. You'll understand if I slip away with her?"
"Why, yes, though I don't know why she should be tired already, Naomi. It's very amusing, and everybody so kind and interested. I was telling her all the way up it would be just a fine opportunity of meeting all the friends."
"It's an ordeal all the same, dear," said Naomi, and made her way through to Poppy's side.

"I'm going, dear, and mother isn't ready. I think you will like to walk back with me. It's very hot in here, and I think you are tired."
The quick gratitude in the girl's eyes touched Naomi to the quick, and also made her a little afraid.

"Oh, thank you, Miss Bradford—Aunt Naomi, I mean," she said, jumping up. "Yes, I should like to come immensely. Oh, yes, Jane, please let me go now. I've been here such a long time—quite an hour, I should think."
"Some people stop all afternoon and seem to like it," observed Jane rather wistfully, at the same time favouring her Aunt Naomi with a distinct glare. "Too bad of you, Aunt Naomi—and so many nice people not yet arrived. It's only half-past four. Of course the best people call quite late nowadays."

Poppy smiled weakly, and very near-said that she did not wish to be numbered with the best people. Instead, however, she murmured a fresh apology, walked straight up to Mrs. Cotman and held her hand.

"Good-bye, Mrs. Cotman. Thank you so much for having me, and letting me stay such a long time." Then she turned to Jim's mother, and there her whole expression changed.
"I've very good, haven't I, Old Dear?—and please don't mind if I go with Aunt Naomi now. It is so kind of her to ask me, and I'll come back for you, if you like, in an hour or so."
"Not such thing," put in Mrs. Cotman rather leily. "The car will take Mrs. Bradford back, as it would have taken you if you had waited."
The car was such a new possession yet for Mrs. Cotman that a ride in it was an event in any day.

Nurses Never Saw Its Equal

"I'm stronger and more active since I began taking Sargon than I've been in 10 years, I've never seen its equal

MRS. MARGARETE MCOLLAN

"About a year ago I had to give up my profession of nursing on account of rheumatic pains that had me badly crippled. I had no appetite, suffered with indigestion and headaches and my liver had become so inactive my tongue stayed coated all the time. I started Sargon and my wonderful improvement speaks for itself. The rheumatic pains and headaches are gone, my appetite is fine, the indigestion has disappeared and I'm feeling like a different person."
"Sargon Pills regulated my bowels and my tongue has cleared."—Mrs. Margaret McCollan, 106 City Road St. John, N. B.

Sargon may be obtained in Charlottetown from the Hughes Drug Co., Ltd.
It was quite real with Poppy, only sometimes it seemed all such a desperate comedy, she did not know where to hide her head to extinguish the uncontrollable laughter which threatened to shake her like a whirlwind. It always came upon her in the most solemn moments, when Jim's mother was waxing eloquent about the goodness of God, and the wonderful working of Providence in the lives of men, or being insistent on the exact performance of every duty, however small and irksome, especially by women, whom God had ordained to be servants of all. It was a simple, homely creed which in her life made for complete happiness. It bewildered the girl who was still stretching out her hands before the fire of life, demanding all. Sometimes, as now, she feared with a deadly cold fear that she had made her fire of bricks and straw which would never burn, but only emit feeble sparks and a suffocating kind of smoke.

Jane accompanied them to the door, still glaring at Aunt Naomi, shook hands stiffly, and walked back to the drawing-room with a high head and an angry face. She considered that Jim's wife had been most rude and insulting, and if hers was a sample of manners in what she called the upper circles, why, then, preserve her from them, that was all!

Outside the highly polished mahogany with its copper fittings Poppy suddenly gripped Aunt Naomi's arm and began to laugh, weakly at first, but it took possession of her till the tears ran down her cheeks.
"Oh, Aunt Naomi, do forgive me! I'm nothing but a proper pig; but it's all so extraordinary. I hadn't an idea

Elinor Glyn talks to CHARLOTTETOWN Women about clothes, marriage and romance

(Right) Elinor Glyn famous writer of romance

"It is colour that makes clothes charming, alluring, expressive of you"

"CLOTHES, clothes, clothes! Clothes in courtship! Clothes after marriage! How steadily the note runs through all my correspondence with women," says Elinor Glyn, "and how much of a mystery, clothes still seem to be!
"Yet it really shouldn't be a problem . . . when you realize why clothes are so important. "You know that you look best in certain colours. There is the clue . . . for it is colour that makes clothes charming, alluring, expressive of you."
"So if you would be successful in romance or in married life, let me give you two rules . . .

"ONE: Wear the colours that suit you best."
"TWO: Keep those colours fresh and new and vital, just as you keep your things clean and dainty.
"The slightest loss in hue, the least deviation from the original tint, spoil the effect . . . and, of course, the charm that the gown or frock brings.
"I have found that the allure that lies in colour is protected by Lux. Repeated washings leave things colour-fresh and colour-vital . . . new-like in hue and power to charm.

And let your surroundings reflect YOU . . .
"Not only in your frocks and accessories, such as gloves, scarfs and handkerchiefs, but equally important in your surroundings, colour is vital. The curtains, draperies and slip covers of your living room form part of the magic spell. And here, too, Lux is invaluable."

people went on like that. Please, please do forgive me. And I must just kiss you here and now for taking me away. You saved my soul, to say nothing of my body!"
They passed through the ornate ironwork gate whereon was a huge copper plate bearing the names of Haddon Hall in early English lettering, which the postman and the errand boys found it hard to read.
And as suddenly as the laughter had come, tears began to course down Poppy's cheeks.

CHAPTER XV
Aunt Naomi gripped the girl firmly by the arm.
"Hush, my dear, you mustn't! People will notice; they might even be looking out of the window at Haddon Hall. It would never do for them to see you cry; they would wonder very much and most certainly misunderstand."
"Would they? I suppose they would," said Poppy, mopping her eyes with the tiniest wisp of pink and white lawn concealed up her sleeve. "I'm a little fool, of course, but it was a large dose all at one time. I hadn't an idea when Old Dear said we were going to tea at Mrs. Cotman's that it would be like that. I—I rather wish it hadn't been sprung on me. Do you suppose Jim knew it would be like that?"
Aunt Naomi smiled.
"I don't think Jim goes to 'at-home' days. Very few men, other than the Rector and the curates, go."
