For The Cook

FRENCH COFFEE CAKE

- 1 cupful scalded milk. 1 yeast cake. 4 1/2 cupfuls flour. 1 teaspoonful sugar. 2-3 cupful butter. 4 eggs. 1/2 cupful sugar. 1/2 teaspoonful lemon rind, grated.

Filling

1/2 cup creamed butter. 2 tablespoonfuls powdered sugar. Dissolve the yeast cake in the luke-warm milk and add the sugar. Allow it to stand for 30 minutes. Cream the two-thirds cupful of butter and add the half cupful sugar, eggs, flour and lemon rind. Mix in the dissolved yeast and beat the mixture hard for ten minutes. Put in warm place to rise for six hours. Then place in the refrigerator overnight to chill and prevent further rising. Roll to one-quarter inch in thickness, spread with the creamed butter to which the powdered sugar has been added and cut dough into in a 375 to 400-degree oven.

True courage has its source in love.

The thing most to be desired in peace or in war, in private or public life, is a steadfast soul.

Neither the magnitude nor the quality of the universe is altered by the discovery of its age.

Klumseigh obtained a job as packer in a china warehouse. On the third day he smashed a big vase. On pay day he was called into the manager's office and told that half his wages would be deducted each week until the vase was paid for.

"How much was the vase worth?" he asked anxiously.

"About $300," replied the manager. "Hurrah!" shouted Klumseigh. The manager stared. "What's the idea?"

"Well," said Klumseigh, "it looks as if I've got a steady job at last."

NEW DOMINION WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The regular monthly meeting of the Institute met at the home of Mrs. A. K. MacPhee on May 6th. The president being absent the vice president occupied the chair. The meeting opened by singing "House Cleaning Hints" or a "Verse for Mother's Day" were the answers for roll call. Eleven members and a large number of visitors were present. Minutes of last regular meeting were read and adopted. The Institute News were distributed to the members. Correspondence was read including a letter from the Red Cross Society. It was moved, seconded and carried that Misses Helen Dorill and Elizabeth MacEwen collect for this society. Questionnaires were distributed to the various convener's. The Institute Quilt was lotteried at this meeting and the members wish to thank those who purchased tickets or helped in any way. The business part over the meeting adjourned by singing the Institute Ode.

At this meeting we welcomed as our invited guests the members of the Parivier Women's Institute also a former member, Miss Dorothy Doull who had just returned from Dalhousie University. A flower contest was put on by Miss Elizabeth MacEwen the prize going to Mrs. Hector Currie. Mrs. Hector MacLean put on a soap contest. Mrs. Ernest Currie and Mrs. Thos. Burdette winning the prize. Then came the lotterizing of the Institute Quilt. Mrs. Ed. Currie, Parivier held the lucky ticket. Instrumental music was furnished by Mrs. Arthur MacDonald and Mrs. Hector Currie. Delicious refreshments were served by the hostess and assisting hostesses. Mrs. Allison MacMillan on behalf of the Parivier Institute in moving a vote of thanks felt that they had spent a profitable and social evening. Mrs. Thos Burdette seconded the motion and it was extended to the president and Institute members by Mrs. Stanley Taylor. The meeting closed by singing the National Anthem. (Patriot Please Copy)

Shall Girl Who Plans to Marry Lawyer Take Law Courts?—How Can Desperate Wife Force Her Husband to Shave?—Husband-Decorator

Dear Miss Dix—I am soon going to be married to a lawyer. I know nothing at all of the law profession. How much interest should a wife have in her husband's occupation and how much should she know about it? Would it be advisable for me to take a special course in law? ALBERTA.

Answer: Whether you should study law or not depends altogether upon the point of view of the young man you are going to marry. I have known several women who studied law and medicine after they were married because their husbands followed those professions and wanted them to be sort of unofficial assistants. In one case the wife became her husband's acting law partner.

But most men prefer their wives to stay at home and keep house and rear the children and to take only an academic interest in their business or profession. They like their wives to know enough about their affairs to listen intelligently, but not enough to be able to criticize or advise.

Generally speaking, it does not make for happiness for husband and wife to follow the same profession, and there are two good reasons for this. One is that they see too much of each other. They get to know each other too well. They get fed up on each other, which produces friction. And for another reason, it promotes jealousy. One is sure to think that the other isn't doing his or her share of the work or is getting too much credit. Especially is this disastrous when the gray mare is the better horse. No husband can endure having his wife excel him in his own line of endeavor.

A wife makes a great mistake when she takes no interest whatever in her husband's affairs, and when she shows that she is bored when he attempts to tell her about his hopes and plans. Every man has to have some woman confidante with whom he can talk over and about which all of his thoughts center. Also, he must have a woman to whom he can brag a little and who will encourage him and tell him how great and wonderful he is and that, of course, he can pull out that deal or win that case or cure that bad case of sickness. And if a man does not have a wife who will lend him her ears he will find somebody else who will.

That is the real reason why so many staid, middle-aged business men fall in love with their secretaries. The secretary knows as much about the business and is as interested in its success as the man is himself and can talk endlessly about it, while the man's wife yawns in his face the minute he begins to tell about that deal he is interested in or how he put it over some other lawyer in a trial or how he diagnosed an obscure case right.

A good wife does not speak disrespectfully, as so many wives do, of "that old edifice" or "that old store." She reveres it as the source from which all blessings flow for her and her children. Nor is she jealous, as so many wives are, of the time and thought and work that her husband gives to his business or profession. She realizes that if he is to make a success in these days of fierce competition he must give the best of himself to his life work and she helps instead of hindering him.

The wife of a great criminal lawyer once told me that when her husband was trying a big case she sent her children to her mother's so that there might not be a sound in the house when he came home, that she called off all of her social engagements and that she prepared with her own hands the most nourishing and easily digested foods for him so that he might be kept in the best possible physical shape to do his work.

And she said she never even spoke to him unless he addressed her first for fear she might distract his trend of thought. That woman probably doesn't know two words of law, yet she stimulates her husband by her interest in his career and she keeps him fit to do his work.

And that is the way that women can mostly help their husbands in their business and professions.

And if a man doesn't like to talk about his work; if he feels, as many men do, that it rests him mentally to look his work up in his desk when he leaves of an evening and never think of or discuss it until he goes back to it the next day, why then, a wife helps most who doesn't pry into her husband's affairs, but just amuses him by turning his thoughts in another direction. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—What in the name of high heaven am I to do with a man who continually embarrasses and humiliates me by allowing his beard to grow four or five days without a shave and who wears dirty clothes downtown? He has only a minor position and gets a small salary. I can bear doing with little money, because he is steady and not a phillanderer and kind around the house, but his slovenliness disgusts me. What can I do about it? MRS. I. S. B.

Answer: Goodness knows, unless you turn the hose on him. As he is too lazy to shave himself, perhaps you might learn how to manipulate a safety razor and do the job for him. Of course, that would add to your labors, but it wouldn't be so hard on you as looking at a man with a stubble of beard on his face.

As for the clothes proposition, that's more easily managed. Another woman who had a sloppy husband wrote me that she settled the question by removing every night as soon as her husband went to bed all the clothes that he had worn that day and substituting for them a suit that she had sponged and pressed and clean linen. It was just as easy to put these on as it was the messy ones he had worn, so he went forth spick-and-span instead of looking like something the cat brought in.

No man stays in love with a woman who is a sloven. Nothing would stay any romantic feeling he might have for her quicker than seeing her go about in a dirty wrapper with frowzy hair and an unpowdered nose. How, then, can he expect a woman, who is sensitive to beauty, to keep romantically in love with him if he looks as if he needed a bath and had his face disguised in lambrequins?

Tell your husband he will have to clean up if he expects to retain your affection, and also tell him that he will have to spruce up if he expects to get a rise in salary.

No employer would advance a man who hadn't enough energy even to shave or press his trousers or keep himself clean. If you look like a down-and-outter, it won't be long before you will be a down-and-outter. We are bound to judge a man by the front he puts up because that is all that we have to go by. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—My husband persists in buying and arranging everything in the house to suit his taste, regardless of whether it is to my liking or not. I think he should recognize the rights and privileges of a wife to express her own individuality in the home. What can I do
