THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION

By Marion Rubincam

BUD'S STORY

Chapter 67

Yet when Vi did get the story from Bud, it was meagre in its details and unsatisfactory enough to both of us.

He came around the following evening and had dinner with us. As Vi was not attending classes yet, she had the whole day to prepare for that dinner—and it was amusing to see her.

"I'm going over to the Italian markets and see if they have Artichokes," she said. "I'll do the marketing don't bother.

So off she went with a basket, while I scoured and cleaned and brought out the treasured possesions we had stored for the summer. There was more than enough work, even in those few rooms, for the summer dust had settled down on everything, and Helen had not had time to keep things clean.

"I've gone over the surface," I said finally, late in the afternoon Tomorrow, I'll begin and scrub. This whole place needs it, and I think I'll give the woodwork a new coat of white paint.

" All right, tomorrow," Vi answered somewhat impatiently. "I only want it to look nice for our dinner tonight.

She put away her packages, rolled up her sleeves and began working fast. She served a delicious dinner, doing all the work herself, and even making tiny flaky biscuits.

And George ate ravenously. He always had a healthy appetite, but tonight he seemed so hungry that I wondered whether he had eaten anl lunch. I did not know till later that the only good meal he ate those few weeks, were at our little apartment.

Finally he leaned back comfortably, the last of a third helping of a frothy dessert finished, and his demmi tasse before him. Vi was very particular about this little end of the dinner ceremony. She brought in our nicest china pot and the little coffee cups on a seperate tray, and served it all as dainily as she could.

"I think I'll go over and see Helen I began. I'll pack the dishes and do them later."

"I'll do them Vi said. I looked at her in her pretey blue taffeta—a little worn now, but still most attractive on her, and shook my head.

No, don't go, I want to tell Vi something, and I want you to hear it too," But said.

That settled it. I sat down and waited.

But first of all Bud rolled himself a cigarette, to smoke as he drank his coffee. And this amazed me too. Bud usually smoked an excellent brand of gold tipped cigarettes, and I had never seen him practice this economy. Plainly, something had happened.

"The first part is an apology and a confession," he said, and sent a little shamefaced smile to Vi.

"I have seen Pete this summer."

"I know that.'

"You do!" all the drama of his confession gone, Bud could do nothing but look confused—and ashamed of himself. Evidently he did not know about the postcard Vi received from Pete.

'Well, I don't know how you know,' he said after a time. I told you, I promised you, when you left that I wouldn't run with that crowd any more. But of course I couldn't promise not to see Pete. I run across him all the time in my work, and we eat at the same quick lunch place."

"You might change the place—"Oh, come," Bud protested. "Its the cheapest and best in that part of the city. Believe me I know! I've gotten indigestion trying them all. Well, our lunch time is the same, so I saw him most every day.

Then he kept wondering why I wouldn't go out. I made a lot of excuses. I guess I did everything but tell him I didn't want to see him. But Pete's a thick skinned fellow he never knows when he's not wanted.

Vi was looking at him, her blue eyes all intensity. Bud poured himself another demmi tasse and went on.

"I couldn't say I promised you not to see him, could I?" He reached over and took Violet's hand. But, strange to say she drew her hand away.

I couldn't be ridiculed fo rbeing tied to a girl's apron strings," he went on, a faint suggestion of a sneer coming around his mouth. "So, finally I said I was trying to save money and couldn't afford to go with him. He said he liked paying the bills—and he does, you know; he likes to give big parties Bud went on, defending his friend.

,Yes, Pete is generous." I agreed

"But, of course ,I couldn't let him do all the treating. Well, then he gave me a first class tip on a mining stock."

"But Bud you lost on oil last winter and you——"

'I know, and I had a hard time paying back. Well, I didn't have any money to plunge on this, but Pete loaned it to me. Yes, I took it," he said, defensively, as Violet's eyebrows went up.

"And I won too I bought a hundred at 2, and it went up to 5, and Pete told me to get out then—I was going to get out earlier—but you see, I made about $300. I paid Pete back, and went in again, and did the same thing—it's a flighty little curb ctock; it jumps about a few points a day. I cleaned up about $700 altogether."

"And then what?" Vi asked, her eyes fairly burning.

"Broken Wing"

A Jump-spark Romance of Modern Mexico

BY PAUL DICKEY AND CHAS. W. GODDARD

From the Sensationally Successful Play Novelized by Charles W. Goddard.

"He's in good hands captain,' and he slapped that worthy on the back so hard that it knocked a puff of cigarette smoke out of his mouth.

"I am not so sure," muttered the Mexican as he stepped out of sight and scowled after the departing car.

Marvin sat down on a rustic bench made of mesquite wood and repeated: "Guardian Angel."

Inez looked up like a flash—

"You ever have a guardian angel?"

"No" he said slowly.

"Some time there might have been she suggested.

"Well, I dont think there was."

"You see," she argued, "you are not sure. Maybe tomorrow you remember her and you forget me. I wonder if she would be glad to get you back?

'But there isn't anyone. I'm sure

"There musn't be,' she stated, sitting beside him ,their faces very close.

"There cannot be two guardian angels, because I know God sent you to me—just me.'

"My brown-eyed angel," said Marvin.

"My King of Hearts," she answered with all her tenderness—then both jumped at a vibrant voice which said:

"Vera pretty picture."

It was Captain Innocencio. He advanced slowly and smiling his sweetest. He even removed his ornate and expensive silver and gold oramented sombrero—Inez stepped back in dismay—this intense sweetness did not deceive her. That's the worst of Mexicans they are sweeter than strained honey one moment and full of hell's lightnings the next.

"You forget who is thees King of Hearts" said the Captain. "I am thees guy.'

"What do you say?" asked Marvin, annoyed at the interruption.

"You hear me, Meester Gringo. I am the King of Hearts and she belong to me."

The American turned and looked at the young woman, who averted her eyes. Was she afraid to answer that statement? Not for herself but for him. She was conscious of that automatic pistol strapped to the Mexican's right thigh. Ine false move and the husband sent from Heaven would go back even more suddenly than he came.

"There must be some mistake." said the American doubtfully.

"A vera big mistake, Meester Gringo, maybe you not so loco like you pretend, eh? Sometime wise guy forget when he no like to remember.

"I don't understand."

"No. Then I make it vera plain, and the Mexican seated himself beside the American and their eyes drew near. "You can forget all you want. so long you remember this: she belong to me.'

Once more the girl evaded Marvin's eyes.

"Do not forget that, Meester Loco, or I slip some cold steel in to the heart, till the warm blood drip, drip, drip! Now, we understeh. Meester Loco.

Marvin was embarrassed. His inclination was to challenge this insolent person and take a chance in snatching his pistol. But the young woman's behavior puzzled him. Perhaps Innocencio had the right to talk as he did. An instinct born of god breeding prompted the youth to change the subject with a laugh—so he turned and looked at the leaking radiator of his plane.

"Drip, drip, drip, he repeated and laughed.

But what are good manners in a New York drawing room, may be very bad manners in Mexico. It was always bad manners and bad policy to laugh at this particular Mexican. The captain's face turned white and the automatic leaper from its holster but there was an object in the way. It was Inez!

"You shoot poor sick man who don't even know what he say! I am ashamed of you Santo.

Slowly the pistol returned to its holster, but the storm of wrath did not wholly clear.

"He laugh at Captian Innocencio Some day he don't finish that laugh."

Now, of course Marvin had to do the stupid thing. He insisted on argueing the matter, but Inez would have none of it. Almost by main force she dragged him into the house. When she returned, the captain was waiting for her.

"What this mean 'Brown eyed angel faced he sneered.

The answer was a glare—fierce as his own.

"You don't want to talk eh?

"Not now Santo. I'm busys."

"Busy—too busy for me, but not too busy for him."

"Don't I want to get him well? What's the matter with you Santo "

I am all right. I am wise guy. The matter is you. What you mean So soon you forget last night you promise to marry me.

"If, if, if, I promise if the King of Hearts don't come. I get down on these knees and pray the good Lord to send me a husband—a good one.

"A good one," repeated the Captain.

Business Improvement Becoming General

MONTREAL, Oct. 21.—In a series of reports received early this month by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association from members in all parts of the Dominion, most encouraging news is contained regarding the general condition of manufacturing industry. There is marked improvemet in many lines and, as compared with last year, much better business is being done. The outlook, too, is hopeful and correspondents generally anticipate that 1923 will be a prosperous year. From a bulky sheaf of reports the following extracts are culledff—

"There is a decided improvement in the prospects for the lumber business," reports a big lumber company in Victoria B.C.

"This season our business has shown a marked improvement for the first time in nine years" says a Pacific Coast cement manufacturer.

"We are very busy, shipping largely to every Province in the Dominion, and also to Newfoundland," states a large Maritime Province confectionery manufacturer.

"We anticipate that this will be the most successful year we have ever had," reports an Ontario glove manufacturer.

"The most outstanding feature about our business during 1922 has been the substantial increase in our export trade," writes a manufacturer of electric applian ces.

"Our fiscal year ending August 31, 1922, showed an increase of 20 per cent in gallonage and ton nage," states a large paint manufacturing company.

"1922 exceeds in volume com parative period of 1921, with marked increase in sales," advises an Ontario box manufacturer.

"Business improving, with a decided gain in some lines over last year," says a Maritime Province biscuit manufacturer.

"We have enjoyed considerable increase in business this year." reports an Ontario varnish manufacturer.

"In 1921 we enjoyed the most profitable year of our history; this year will be equally as good," says a manufacturer of corsets.

"Business has shown decided improvement in volume over 1921, is the finding of a Maritime Province box manufacturer.

"We are increasing our output very considerably," says a large piano manufacturer.

"Business very much better than expected and shows big increase over last year," reports company manufacturing nails and tacks.

"We report a very satisfactory increase over previous year's showing," states an important automobile manufacturing company.

"We have noticed a marked improvement in general business this year," reports a manufacturer of abrasive wheels.

"Business has been exceptionally good with us," states a company engaged extensively in the fibre industry.

"At the present time our factory is running overtime," says a pencil manufacturer.

"A very considerable increase in business this fall, with results beyond expectations," reports an Ontario shoe manufacturer.

"Our Canadian and export business is the best in the history of the company," states another corset manufacturer.

"We have been operating full since early March and output this year will be greatest in our history,"—a big sheet metal manufacturer.

"We are working up to the highest capacity of any season," is the information supplied by an Ontario trunk manufacturer.

"We are booking orders in much greater volume than this time last year," states a manufacturer of electric lamps.

"We are steadily increasing our output, and prospects are good for a busy winter," reports a large lithographing company.

"We are increasing the course of our operations as the demand for our product is increasing to a very encouraging extent"—a manufacturer of machine tools.

"Shipments up to 31st August show increase of over 70 per cent. over same period of 1921"—a big producer of hardwood flooring.

"Comparing June, July and August with last year, sales are 30 per cent. ahead of last year."—a manufacturer of electric fixtures

"Demand for our product has been extremly good, exceeding our ability to produce"—one of Canada's largest brick manufacturing companies.

Prepare For Race

(By JAMES B. CONNOLLY.)

GLOUCESTER, Mass., Oct. 20—International Race Committee decided tonight that Ford will have to reduce her sail by four hundred feet, she being that much over allowance, but Capt. Morrisey says that of course he will accept the committee's decision and make the best of it. Tonight he set to work altering the mainsail and foretopsail by working all night, he hopes to have the sails altered and bent on again in time for the start.

The Bluenose, Ford, Howard and Mayflower, were all outside the Eastern point today trying out The Bluenose went off by herself and came in early. The Mayflower proved herself a wondertully fast vessel running before the wind no test was made in windward work.

The Gloucester is all excited over Ford's reduced chances. Fishermen here, think any vessel should be allowed to carry all the sail she cant stand, up under, sail reduction was protested but to no avail. Visitors from Nova Scotia were confident enough before but now they say there is nothing to it but the Bluenose. Prospects for tomorrow being light to moderate winds, which means that the Ford chances will be badly hurt because besides losing that much sail, the vessel is likely to be thrown out of balance under the reduced sail plan.
