50th ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. Stanius L. Doiron, Mayfield, who celebrated their fiftieth anniversary on Nov. 27.

An event of more than ordinary interest took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stanius L. Doiron, Mayfield, on November 27th, when the family with the exception of one son Edgar, serving with the royal Canadian Corp somewhere in England, met to celebrate their fiftieth anniversary.

They were escorted to the decorated living room by two of their grand-children, Lorraine Doiron and Charlie Gallant, who acted as bridesmaid and groomsman. The chairman, James Doiron, then called on John L. Doiron to read the address which was accompanied by a gift of a bed complete. Mrs. Amos Blacquiere was then asked to preside at the organ and a program followed consisting of solos, duets, reading and step-dancing.

After an address by the Rev. E. J. Dalton, and members of the family, the program was brought to a close by singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows". Mr. and Mrs. Doiron spoke words of appreciation of having their family with them, and for the gift they received. After dinner was served a few of the neighbors gathered in to pay tribute in token of their friendship and wished them many more years of health and happiness.

Following was the address.

To our dear parents:—

This is indeed a happy occasion for us to be privileged to be with you on this your fiftieth anniversary of your wedding. On Nov. 27, 1894, you joined hands before God's Holy Altar and there pledged your troth, and promised your loyalty and devotion to one another, and your willingness to carry out the designs God had intended for you. A large family of happy boys and girls blessed your union, and though not endowed with an abundance of this world's goods yet you managed to provide a good home, and a good sound moral and Christian education for all of us. Today we have all left the home roof, and established homes of our own, but the happiest moments of our lives are those when we return to spend a few happy hours with you both.

One of our brothers, following in the footsteps of another noble brother is today far from the home roof, risking his life in the service of his country. You, Father and Mother are justly proud of him and we join with you in the fervent hope that God will spare him to return to his loved ones, and we are confident that today he is in spirit with us in helping to make this a happy and memorable day for you both.

You have had trials and sorrows which clearly bring out the words: "No Cross, No Crown", but your undaunted courage and never-failing cheerfulness through it all has brought its reward. Today you both enjoy a good measure of health, and we all look forward to having your advice and guidance for many years to come.

May God bless you both is the fervent wish of your children.

Victory Loan Prizes For Salesmen

At the beginning of the Seventh Victory Loan Campaign, the Provincial management committee of the National War Finance Committee, in order to create competition and stimulate sales, offered three prizes, donated by prominent business firms, to the leading salesmen based on points as follows:—

1. 35 points for the greatest percentage of new applications.
2. 35 points for the greatest percentage of increased dollar sales over the 6th Loan.
3. 15 points for greatest number of applications.
4. 15 points for greatest percentage of Monthly Savings and Deferred Payment Letters sales to total applications.

So many salesmen have done a magnificent job that it has proven a difficult task, and has involved a lot of close figuring to determine the winners. Major R. E. Howard in the Springfield district, who has worn the King's uniform in two wars, wins the first prize and receives the suit of clothes donated by Prowse Brothers. The second prize, a leather windbreaker from Henderson & Cudmore, goes to Mr. Percy McPherson of Dunblane in the O'Leary district, while Mr. Arthur Sullivan of Montague, will wear the men's oxfords contributed by the LePage Shoe Co. Ltd.

In offering congratulations to these fortunate winners, the committee also congratulates the sales force as a whole for producing such a satisfactory result, enabling the Island to reach 134 per cent of its objective.

The Committee also extends thanks to the firms who so generously donated the prizes.

McNaughton Statements Discussed By Members In House of Commons

Examination by Col. J. L. Ralston, former Minister of National Defense, and others, of statements made in the House of Commons by General A.G.L. McNaughton, Minister of National Defense, on the subject of overseas reinforcements: from the Hansard official report, Nov. 23. Continued from Saturday's Guardian:

Mr. Green: You are relying a good deal on these young lads who have had six or six and a half weeks' training in England getting at least forty-eight hours' training when they get to their battalions?

Mr. McNaughton: I am relying much more than that on the testing by the officers as the men come up through the various echelons checking on the standards of qualifications which are required and physical fitness and so on. All of these echelons have authority to hold back in the training stream or in the depots people whom they consider to be unfit. I am satisfied, too, as matters have progressed, that we have a comprehensive number of officers and N.C.O.'s who have very great experience and who have been placed in these key positions where they can check the training and ensure the adequacy of people who are passing through their hands.

May I say one thing further? One of the things that I was always interested in and one of the things which relieved me most was to find, when I came to the department and asked what was being done with left-out-of-battle personnel, this information. I was relieved when the staff turned me up a copy of this letter from one of our senior commanders: I said: "At last we have this thing under control with the units themselves in place of having it left to chance." Once we have it checked at that point by the people who have to use and be responsible for the lives of these young men, they will very quickly bring the echelons up to standard, if they have been falling down. I was relieved to find that letter given as an order by one of our senior commanders in the field.

"What Chance?"

Mr. Green: In any event you are placing a good deal of reliance on the training that these young boys will get when they reach the battalion. What is to happen in the case of a boy going up to the Seaforth Highlanders of Vancouver as an example and meeting a condition where that unit has been reduced to fifty or a hundred men, and they are in desperate straits to hold their part of the front? How much training do you think that boys will get under those conditions — and some of us as infantrymen saw that happen in the last war—

Mr. McNaughton: Quite so.

Mr. Green: Actually what will happen, as you know, will be that boy will be put right in the line, and the chances are that he will be killed or wounded within twenty-four hours. If he is lucky enough to live he may learn something. We have had men back from the Seaforths, and that is exactly what has been happening in Italy. What do you do in a case like that?

Mr. Pouliot: Before the general answers may I say I submit that he is not a witness in court. He should sit down while such questions are being asked.

Mr. Green: What chance do you think a boy has to get training in the unit in circumstances like that?

Mr. McNaughton: The hon. member has described a specific case.

Mr. Green: I am sure that there are many of them.

Mr. McNaughton: It is a case where one of our battalions in an attack has been reduced to a strength of fifty all ranks.

Mr. Green: Or one hundred.

Mr. McNaughton: If the circumstances of battle permitted, what would happen there is that the unit would be withdrawn.

Mr. Green: Suppose it is not withdrawn?

Mr. McNaughton: Some of us have been in like positions; no doubt you have; I have been myself. Under those conditions, when the fate of the battle depends on it, it is the duty of every man, regardless of his qualifications or training, to do the best he can.

Draftees' Duty

Mr. Green: Government members are applauding. What does the general think the duty of the men who are in the home defence army fully trained in combat training should be?

Mr. McNaughton: The duty of the man in the home defence army is that he should take up his honourable obligation of service, and take it up at once, as other Canadians are doing.

Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury): If he does not do so, then what?

Mr. Green: I suppose there is no obligation on the government to send him over!

Under this proposed plan there will be two types of Canadian soldier, one who fights and one who does not fight.

Mr. McNaughton: That is a statement of fact; I am not sure whether it is a question.

Mr. Green: I will put it as a question. Under your present policy will it be a fact that there will be two types of Canadian soldier, one who fights and one who does not?

Mr. McNaughton: I sincerely trust that these young men will come forward to take up their obligations. I am doing everything I can to persuade them to do so.

Mr. Green: I understood you to say in your statement that you had reached the conclusion that it is impossible to persuade these young men to come forward.

Mr. McNaughton: I said that under the circumstances as they exist at the moment there are not enough men with the requisite background of training coming forward to provide the essential reserves needed for our army overseas. For that reason, and for that reason only, I have been vested with authority, which I shall use, to see that the army is kept up. May I say that the organization in Canada is separate and distinct from the keeping up of our army overseas.

Mr. Green: But it is important.

Mr. McNaughton: I agree.

Mr. Green: The lives of young Canadians are at stake.

Mr. McNaughton: No one agrees more profoundly with what you have stated than I. One of the most difficult problems which faces me in the Department of National Defence is not the business of getting men to volunteer for service overseas, because once the unity and the will of the people of this country are established that will occur of itself. I have been given the residual problem of the N.R.M.A. personnel in the camps. Even with the most honest searching of our hearts as to how to go about it, we really do not yet know how to handle it. We have to study and investigate; we have to be sympathetic; we have to be human about it. We will find the answer, although I have not it yet to give you.

Mr. Green: Do you think you will promote unity by this policy of yours?

Mr. MacKenzie (Vancouver Centre): To support the soldiers overseas?

Mr. Green: Mine is a fair question. Do you think you will promote unity by this policy of yours?

Mr. McNaughton: My primary responsibility to this House is the maintenance of the army overseas. I try in my humble way to put first things first. My business is to look after the army, and that I will do. May I say to the hon. member that if we do that and do it right, a lot of fine consequences will follow and we shall not have to worry about the unity of Canada.

Mr. Green: That is all very nice, but you have not answered the question.

Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre): This is on a high plane.

Mr. Green: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre need not talk about things being on a high plane. Is your plan to continue asking N.R.M.A. men to volunteer for general service?

Mr. McNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Green: You propose to carry on in Canada the two systems, general service and N. R. M. A.; is that correct?

Mr. McNaughton: I want to phrase my answer in words that are understandable. The policy is to have voluntary service, and there will be an extension of that principle only where it is necessary to meet deficiencies in our army overseas.

Mr. Green: But the two methods will still be carried on?

Mr. McNaughton: We have a problem on our hands. We have 60,000 men in the N.R.M.A. They are there physically in existence and something has to be done about them. The system must continue until it is liquidated, either by the men volunteering for service or by their going into some other form of activity. You cannot change an organization with 60,000 men in it just overnight.

Mr. Green: What about the young lads you are going to call up from now on? Are you going to continue calling up men and then asking them to volunteer? Are the men who are to be called up to be for service anywhere, or are they simply to go into the N. R. M. A. in Canada and then have to be persuaded to go active?

Mr. McNaughton: There has been no alteration in the call-up system. Under that system we forecast the activities and needs for a long time in advance and then we requisition on the Department of Labour for certain numbers of personnel who are physically fit and in certain other categories to be turned over to the army. Those who volunteer after being taken into the N. R. M. A. depots count against the quota and are later diverted into the training stream, while the others are handled through the N. R. M. A.

Mr. Green: The others simply go as N.R.M.A.?

Mr. McNaughton: Until they volunteer.

In Memoriam

In loving memory of our dear mother, Mrs. George Paynter, who departed this life December 11th, 1943.

No one knows how much we miss her
No one knows the bitter pain
We have suffered since we lost her
Life has never been the same.
Though her smile has gone forever
And her hand we cannot touch
We shall always cherish memories
Of the one we loved so much.
Friends may think we have forgotten
When they sometimes see us smile
But they little know the heartache
That the smile hides all the while.

Ever Remembered by Her Family.
