When I quit this mortal shore
And mosey round this earth no more,
Don't weep, don't sigh, don't sob,
I may have struck a better job.

Don't go and buy a large bouquet
For which you'll find it hard to pay;
Don't mope around and feel all blue,
I may be better off than you.

Don't tell the folks I was a saint,
Or say old thing that I ain't;
If you have jam like that to spread,
Please hand it out before I'm dead.

If you have roses, bless your soul,
Just pin one in my buttonhole While I'm alive and well—today, Don't wait until I've gone away.

"TOMORROW IS FOREVER" AT CAPITOL

Unfolding one of the most entertaining and impressive love stories the screen has offered in a decade, Claudette Colbert, Orson Welles and George Brent, supported by a group of refreshing youngsters, brought "Tomorrow Is Forever" to the screen at the Capitol Theatre yesterday to the sheer delight of local show-goers.

Based on a Gwen Bristow story first published in Ladies Home Journal and then as a best selling novel, International Pictures has demonstrated great finesse and understanding in transferring the lives of two men who married the same woman, to the screen. As a dramatic plot "Tomorrow Is Forever" is distinguished. As a terrifier, deep-rooted love story it is rich in those elements which go to make a picture truly great. Without being theatrical in the least, Elizabeth's short married life with witty John MacDonaid, and the longer life as Mr. Larry Hamilton, mother of one son by John, another by Larry, makes compelling entertainment. Playing Elizabeth, who believed her first husband dead prior to the birth of her first son, Miss Colbert has perhaps her finest screen role, easily surpassing that in "Since You Went Away" which made her an Academy nominee for the fifth time in her brilliant screen career.

ENHANCEMENT OF LIFE

Christianity has often been criticized on the ground that it inhibits men; that wherever experience would seem to be attractive and rewarding it confronts them with a "thou shalt not"; that of any two possible choices they must always take the more difficult way, and that therefore to be a Christian is to accept an impoverished life rather than one that is rich, complete and satisfying. Such a criticism results from a failure to understand the clear teaching both of our Lord and of St. Paul. The ten commandments, with their negative prohibitions, were no doubt essential in the earlier stages of Hebrew religion, as the child before he is capable of developing the positive social virtues must be taught that there are many things he may not do.

A life which is based upon a religion of negations must always be weak and ineffectual; it will lack courage and enterprise, since it will be dominated largely by fear. It was no such religion that in the first century "turned the world upside down." The idea of "self-expression" can be and often has been so interpreted as to be egoistic and selfish and aggressive. Yet it is the purpose of the Christian religion to enable men to become themselves, but themselves at the highest possible levels; not to negate personality but to enhance it. As the spirit of Jesus more and more permeated the lives of the Apostles they did not cease to express their individual characteristics; their own inherent qualities were purified and thereby raised to new levels of potency. The secret of that attainment is suggested by the words which sum up St. Paul's list of virtues: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom." The word "dwell" is significant, for that which inhabits the mind tends to become the mainspring of character; a process of gradual attainment. No merely casual attention to the word of Christ avails, whether his word as recorded in the Gospels or as it speaks directly to the soul. As the Christian ponders the sayings of our Lord, thus making the word of Christ his own, he enters into that communion with him which is at once the condition of the good life and the source of a power which enables men to rise to their own highest possibilities.

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

ity, so much I have come to appreciate his approval in making final selections. Not that my shopping today would have suffered, though there was a letter to the wallpaper for the kitchen. I had to have James' opinion on that.

At the corner (and accompanied by grunts and snorts from more than one of the hog-kind in the rear of the truck) where the quiet of this road of ours gives place to the busy traffic of the highway, I left my nice seat between James and Mr. G. and with another lady shopper from the community, joined Mr. and Mrs. H. E. from "the village by the sea" and rode in state by car to the rest of the way to the city. It was much later indeed when I met James, who pig disposed of, had been "just looking for" me on one of the busier streets. We fell in step and made our way towards our lunch. "Too bad" James said, as we walked along "that we had to sell that one, Ellen—I never saw a more likely looking animal, and such a good breed too. James would know, and be able to go back sibly and without error for several generations. I sighed as behoveeth a farmer's wife at such a time, and glanced with interest at the displays in the windows we were passing. If she had been unwilling to assume the duties of motherhood, it was in a way, no affair of mine. Not everyone sees eye to eye on this subject. Some are bound to say "if they never make you laugh; they'll never make you cry" and so dismiss it though I believe, the former quite overshadows the latter, and when they are grown and gone it is the laughs one remembers.

"I think, James" I said brightly some time later, when we had about reached what he had set as a limit in our spending "we may as well get the wallpaper for the kitchen now". My limbs were beginning to weary from keeping pace with him, but I had kept my "spirit undaunted" to this hour. "Wallpaper!" James repeated so loudly that an elderly gentleman, with a cane, jumped hurriedly aside, and a prim lady, glanced towards us and then, hurried away and quickened her step. "Not wallpaper for the kitchen, Ellen! Why it's only last year that you papered it!" James' memory appears to lapse in matters like this while on others it is as clear as day. And all the while we were nearing a dealers, indeed before he was aware of it, he had followed me to the wallpaper department in a busy store. But not before he had advised me in a tone, which made a clerk who overheard it look up inquiringly from attending to a customer "Do your buying quick, Ellen—or not at all. You know Mr. G's not as patient as I would be—he can't wait around for you all day." It was fortunate for all concerned that I happened quickly to catch sight of a paper, within reach of resources and decorated fetchingly here and there with pots of posies-nasturtiums. I believe they are I am not too certain of that. I only know that at a glance, it held a sunny glow, which made me recall bees about the lawn on a summer day, humming birds on the wing and all of the nice things which combine to make one remember those delightful flower-filled days.

SUGAR IN BLOOD

An adult has half an ounce of sugar in his blood.

"And how" James inquires of Karolyz by 'phone "did Jamie get along today?" The reply must have been a favorable one. For James is all smiles. "Yes" he says, "in a tone that implies resignation "we were in town-oh, no, we didn't buy much, she got some paper, yes, I think it's for the kitchen—is it, Ellen? No, I don't know what it's like-it was dear enough I know. And he wasn't a bit lonesome? Well!" this then has been a day for James and me and now "for goodness sake, Ellen" he says "have you got no shame at all? Get me something to eat—I'm starving!"

In Memoriam

GORDON J. SENTNER
—Fifty Seventh Birthday—1947

This your birthday, daddy dear Not as it used to be The gladness of the day is gone
You are not here to see;
No presents now, just flowers dear
Upon your grave we lay.
But oh, how happy we would be,
If we had you back to-day.
