"BANQUETTED BY CHOIR"—Mr. Allison MacLean whose marriage takes place in the near future, and Mr. Russel Finley, who is leaving Montague, were tendered a banquet at the Poole Hotel on Saturday evening. Twenty-two Church Choir, of which both are members. Nothing was left undone to make the occasion a happy one, and it will long be remembered by all present. Twenty-nine members sat down to the banquet table. The menu consisted of many delicious dishes named for the different members. The dining room was decorated in mauve, and yellow, and the artistic place-cards were in mauve, each with something depicting suggesting the owner's vocation. The following was the programme: Rev. Arthur Long was toastmaster, "The King," proposed by Rev. A. Long, responded to by singing the National Anthem; "The Church," proposed by Mr. Everett Moore, responded to by Mr. Vernon Ross; solo, by Miss Margaret Coffin; toast to Mr. Russel Finley, proposed by Mrs. L.A. Johnston, responded to by Mr. Russel Finley; by Rev. Arthur Long; toast to Mr. Allison MacLean, proposed by Miss Vera Andrew, responded to by Mr. Allison MacLean. Mr. Finley, who is transferred to Charlottetown from the Maritime Electric Co. Branch at Montague, will be greatly missed by the choir and Sunday School of which he was superintendent, and in all church work as he was a faithful worker in all its departments. An address was read by Miss Alva Brehaut and Mr. Finley responded with a Church Hymnary bound in leather. Mr. Allison MacLean was next called on and a very humorous address in rhyme was read when he was presented with a "Money Anthus." This proved to be a most unique and unusual kind of tree in a fancy pot, each branch bearing a crisp dollar bill tied in the center, and along with it was full directions for tending it so that it would increase still further. After this, all joined in singing "Auld Lang Syne" and a very pleasant evening came to a close.

That Body of Hours

HOW REGULAR PLAY PREVENTS THE CHILD FROM TIRING EASILY

When we were youngsters returning from school in the afternoon, it was our custom to get a bit of bread and butter covered with brown sugar, then go out to play until the hour of the evening meal. To-day, while many parents give their youngsters candy, school-milk, or banana and orange—many other parents feel that it is unwise to give children food between meals, and the youngster gets no food between lunch and dinner, or dinner and supper whichever happens to be the daily routine. He is often then too tired to want to digest food. Now before the school age when youngsters are "picky" about food, it may be wise to let them eat between meals but a growing boy or girl who wishes to be out doors playing after school should have some food to "play on." This little extra supply of food gives them the strength with which to play and the play actually uses up this extra food so that the child needs food again at the evening meal. How is it known when a youngster needs food? The food that gives energy with which to play is the starch or sugar foods. If there is not a normal amount of sugar in the blood there will be a feeling of weakness and tiredness. Play or exercise not only uses up sugar but manufactures lactic acid. The amount of lactic acid in the blood shows the amount or degree of fatigue or tiredness of the individual. Now, what has play to do with fatigue and sugar or starch? Dr. Frederic W. Schultz and Eleanor Blish, in American Journal of Children's Diseases, in investigating the use of sugar in children with an empty stomach, found in children who were weak that after eating sugar there was a great rise in the amount of sugar in the blood, whereas in children who were rugged or normal the rise in blood sugar was not so great. That is, the rugged children did not need the sugar so much as there was not so much lactic acid in their blood. They did not get tired so soon. The big point, however, discovered by these research workers was, "The child's ability to play or exercise for a longer time and to do more work with less production of lactic acid was more dependent on training (playing regularly) than on the effect of eating the sugar. The influence of training was so marked that it overshadowed the amount of good done by the sugar. Encourage your youngster to play regularly after school."

CANADIANS ASSIST FAMINE SUFFERERS

ESTEVAN, Sask., June 7—Contributions of the Canadian Missionary Society to starving thousands in war-torn China brought high praise from Miss Jean Holt, formerly of Brandon, Man., who has been a missionary in West China for 25 years, visiting here on furlough. Miss Holt said Canadians came to the rescue of countless sufferers of West China's famine. She taught school in Jungshien, 1,600 miles west of Shanghai.

In all parts of China, children undergo compulsory military training, she said. Girls wear trousers and military coats and caps, patterned after the uniform worn by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, who is regarded as a national hero. Men and boys wear a similar style of dress.
