

AS CANADA KNEW HER—This is Amy Mollison in 1932, when she and her husband attempted a flight from Wasaga Beach to Britain. The heavily loaded plane rose only two feet, pumped along the ground, damaged the landing gear. They abandoned the flight.

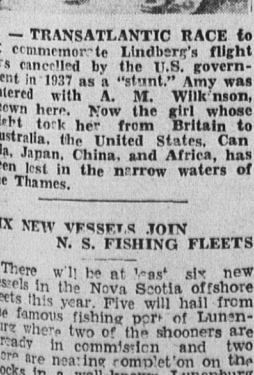

TWO WOMEN whose aerial exploits kept them continuously in the news were Amy Johnson and Amelia Earhart, shown here. Both now have ended their lives in sea crashes—Miss Earhart in the south Pacific, and Amy Johnson in the Thames estuary. Surface craft tried vainly to rescue her after she parachuted to the water from 200 feet.

FLAUDISTS OF THE WORLD were the daily lot of Amy Johnson. Great cities and remote villages alike received her with acclaim. In recent years she turned to aerobatics, glider piloting, and instructing in the Civil Air Guard. When she began she pointed of the Air Transport Auxiliary and ferried military aircraft.

TRANSATLANTIC RACE to commemorate Lindbergh's flight was cancelled by the U.S. government in 1937 as a "stunt." Amy was entered with A. M. Wilkison, shown here. Now the girl whose flight took her from Britain to Australia, the United States, Canada, Japan, China, and Africa, has been lost in the narrow waters of the Thames.

SIX NEW VESSELS JOIN N. S. FISHING FLEETS There will be at least six new vessels in the Nova Scotia offshore fleets this year. Five will hail from the famous fishing port of Lunenburg where two of the schooners are already in commission and two more are nearing completion on the stocks in a well-known Lunenburg shipbuilding yard. The fifth Lunenburg craft is in the process of construction at Shelburne another shipbuilding point on the Nova Scotian coast. As this latter port has recently been launched and is now in commission operated out of Lunenburg by a local firm. All six vessels are of the modern design and are equipped with power.

OTTAWA, Jan. 8 (CP)—Labor Minister McLarty is expected to announce this week changes in the youth training plan to provide 100,000 partially skilled workmen—men and boys—in industry in 1941. The plan has been turning out trainees during the last months of 1940 at the rate of 40,000 a year. The Minister's announcement is expected to reveal a more general scale of allowances to persons taking the training. Schedules will be sufficient to enable married men to support their families while engaged in three-month courses.

The Dominion government will provide for the all-women and as soon as courses are completed the trainees will be absorbed into industries engaged in war production on a standard scale of wages which will be uniform in all parts of Canada for plants on war work, it is understood.

On Jan. 15 the youth training plan also will begin training members of the Canadian (Active) Army in trades at the 65 training centres and technical schools at the rate of between 3,000 and 5,000 in each course which will average three months.

If an army unit requires a blacksmith, an electrician, a machinist or a tailor, a man from the unit will be selected and will be trained for the vacant job. Owing to the great demand on the technical schools and training centres many of the classes will have to be held at night.

One of the difficulties confronting the plan is getting capable instructors. Appeals are being made to men retired and no longer physically capable of doing hard work but who were skilled workmen in their day. They are being asked to take refresher courses that will fit them to instruct the new trainees. "You will be surprised," said a Labor Department official, "how many men we came across who were one-time skilled workmen but for one reason or another left their jobs to try other means of earning a living. Great numbers of this class are not too old to do a refresher course in the trade in which they were once employed to brush them up, and then call upon industry to absorb them."

"Of course, industry is not expected to take on men 45 and 50 years old but they will have to do so. Many of them will prove valuable to their employers. We do not intend to force on industry men too old to do a good day's work. We shall keep such men where possible as instructors."

ENGLAND MUST LIVE
Can England live, with German aeroplanes over head Bombing, spreading misery where ere they go
While civilians grim and brave gather up the dead
And lay them in their glory down
Do you think you can live, in honor of her name
For decency and honor has been always England's fame.

England must live, because should England fall
Treasuries we reverence would suffer the same fate.
Sons of the Empire have answered to your call.
The justice and freedom that our Empire tolerates
Are looking to your standard you should stand
England, you'll be England, while other nations fade away.

They forced you to fight, England, your choice was only one
But history will help you when you are tired and worn
May you remember your fathers be the spirit of their sons
And you press on still farther until victory is won
May the hand of God be with you— you are right
For your deeds of honor merit a future that is bright.

LITTLE THINGS
Little things may grow to big ones. Tended well, they bear much fruit. A tiny seed may grow a giant tree. Towering high above its root.

A tiny spark may loom a monster And spread destruction far and wide. Because some human failed to check it. So that the flames stretch every side.

Remember, as you look about you, Not just the large things need your care. The little things are far more precious. A budding rose, a lock of baby's hair.

A kind word spoke in a cheerful manner May take a ray of sunshine in its wake. While rows of gold gave out with grudge and hardness Will only feelings hard, unfriendly take.

The little things may bring with them great blessings. The heart to store with memories of gold; A word of love and kindness that is spoken Lifetime ere it shall grow old. —H. O'Connor.

LIVED PAUPER WITH $89,000. LONDON, Jan. 8 (CP)—Elizabeth Perrot lived in poverty for 26 years, earning her living as best she could sometimes selling flowers in the street and sometimes working as an office cleaner. Her father, William Perrot, had been a wood turner and lived in a frugal way. He died at 90. When his daughter became too old to work, representatives of her church helped her for a time, but in 1938 it was suggested she go into the poor house. The curate asked Miss Perrot if she had any relatives or papers. She said her father left an old tin box, but it was locked and there was no key, so it had never been opened. The box was broken open and deposited notes and government stocks, worth $89,000 were found. This "most romantic story" as Mr. Justice called it, was told in the Chancery Division at the hearing of a court case involving members of the Perrot family.

Medicinal Plants and Herbs In Winter

(Science Service Notes)
In wartime there is a general desire to make a contribution to the war effort and the winter weather that contribution may be in the form of medicinal plants.

Recently in the United Kingdom the Medical Research Council has dealt with possible requirements and the importation of medicinal herbs. The Dominion Botanist, Division of Botany and Plant Pathology, Science Service, Dominion Department of Agriculture states that it is not surprising that it is regrettable that many enthusiasts and willing helpers have been misled by somewhat exaggerated accounts of the value of medicinal plants and their products.

LONDON, Jan. 8 (CP)—Night after night bombers of the Royal Air Force sweep over Germany and German-occupied territory in ever-increasing numbers, operating on a long-range plan designed to cripple the wartime industrial life of the Reich.

In October and November there were raids on Germany 51 nights on and off. In the last week of November alone there were 24 towns and cities raided at least four times during those two months.

The R. A. F. operates on a bombing plan that is based on weak points in the economic fabric of Germany such as oil resources and inland communications. By its nature, an aerial offensive is episodic and it is difficult to judge its day-to-day effect because there is no slowly developing battle-front, definable by changing pins on a map.

By suveying operations over a period of time, it has been estimated that their objects and effects otherwise they appear geographically and tactically unrelated.

PRIMARY TARGETS
Apart from armament and aircraft factories, royal bases and shipyards, the R. A. F. have two primary targets in Germany and they are definitely related. The first is oil stocks, refineries and synthetic oil plants and the second inland communications, railways, canals, road transport.

Hardly a night passed in October or November without an attack on oil targets of some sort in Germany. The largest oil refinery, situated at Leuna in Saxony, Gelsenkirchen, near Ess, and Politz near Stettin and the Rhenaia Osag refineries and storage tanks at Hamburg have been the most heavily bombed.

Elsewhere in Germany there are nearly a score of oil production and storage plants and they were visited regularly by German bombers. Generally no oil deposits and has been forced to rely on imports and synthetic production from coal, a costly and complex process, demanding huge plants providing excellent targets for bombers.

ATTACKS TRANSPORT
The attack on transport has been progressing ever since the invasion of the Low Countries. The railway yards at Hamm, at the eastern end of the Ruhr, and have been attacked nearly 80 times since the war started. The repeated attacks on railways because it is the focal point of Germany's railway system which, it is definitely known, is getting short of equipment. On reason for this—and it shows the result of R. A. F. raids—has been an attempt to get out of the reach of British bombers.

25-POUNDER GUNS
CANBERRA (CP)—The Australian ministry of munitions has brought out an advanced stage a $16,000,000 project for the manufacture of 25-pounder guns combining long range with the general purposes of the 4.5 inch howitzer.

BAN DIRTY FINGERS
SOMEWHERE IN ENGLAND (CP)—The Royal Air Force is careful about its cooks. Cookies in an R. A. F. camp are daily for "finger-nail inspection" before going to work on the troops' food.

BEDFORD, ENGLAND—(CP)—Tired Londoners are resting in the Parish hall of St. Paul's church here the officials having turned the hall into a dormitory and providing bed and breakfast in rural quiet for a small fee.

British Scouts acting as messengers with almost bit pleasant sense of devotion to duty. While cycling at night with a message, 16-year old Patrol Leader Pearce of Chilwell was knocked down by an unlighted car. Leaving his damaged bicycle at the roadside, and despite a severe leg injury, he proceeded afoot. On reaching his destination the car collapsed and was found to be in need of immediate medical attention.

Boy Scout waste material campaigns in all parts of the Dominion, to raise Red Cross and other war service funds, have been bringing out some strange contributions, but none more so than the "wax" salvage collection conducted by the Scouts of the Capital. It included an 8-inch shell and cartridge case from Great War I, an ancient foot-power shoe sewing machine, an aluminum section of the framework of the famous dirigible R101, and several German guns from the municipalities of the nearby communities. The list had its climax in a telephone call to "come and get an old horse."

Scouters and the Ladies Committee
Boy Scouts of the Government high school at Sima, India, provided an example of a complete first aid kit when a train was wrecked nearby. Quickly at the scene, they rendered first aid, then helped transport the injured to a hospital, carried messages from passengers to relatives in the city, in some cases brought relatives to the side of the injured. They sent telegrams and wrote letters for passengers to relatives and friends who were expecting them at different points in the Punjab.

Behind Bulgaria's King is Goering

This picture symbolizes the shadowy game of pressure politics now going on in the Balkans. The pressure is being applied to Bulgaria, which is said to have received a Nazi ultimatum demanding passage for German troops. Filling the other way is Russia, whose intervention is credited with keeping Bulgaria from joining the Axis. In this picture, Marshal Eemman Goering stoops to follow King Boris from a new plane in Sofia.

The Tweedsmuir Room, the Hall-Club for ex-Scouts in H. M. Forces, continues to attract numerous interesting visitors. On a November evening the gathering included several naval officers, all keen Scouts. They played games with the sailors and joined in the yarn-spinning and singing, and at the end of the evening expressed their appreciation of the hospitality being extended by Halifax.
