All That Glitters

By Frances Parkinson Keyes

Zoe laid down the letter with mingled feelings of amusement, eagerness and disappointment. As she rose from the lounge chair the telephone rang. "Zoe, have you been worried?" It was Bob's voice.

"Yes, a little."

"Well, there's nothing to worry about. It may be pretty late before I can leave the office. I'll be there as soon as I can. So long."

Zoe put down the receiver and went on toward the kitchen, struggling to suppress her hurt feelings. She told Pearl Gray that she would like a tray in bed and when she had eaten her supper, she turned out the light and lay down, intending to listen for Bob. But she was very sleepy, and finally she ceased to struggle against her drowsiness. She had no idea how long she had slept when she waked again and realized that Bob was beside her. "Bob," she said softly. "Please tell me what happened."

"Not now. I'm too dog-tired. I will in the morning. Or tomorrow evening if there isn't time in the morning. Go to sleep, Zoe." When she waked the next morning he had gone.

She went through her day's work mechanically, and when she reached home in the evening Bob was already in the living room. She went over to him and put her hand gently on his arm. "Dearest," she said, "do tell me what's the matter. Did the new market slump yesterday affect your father worse than the others?"

"Yes. He's about cleaned out."

"But, Bob, he has his senatorial salary and his salary as the president of the bank at Mortonville. They don't represent riches but they are a competence."

"They would be if they were clear. But almost every cent of those two salaries has to be paid out in interest. On notes he's been signing for the last twenty years."

"Zoe pressed Bob's arm more tenderly. "If it's as bad as all that, we must do everything we can. If everyone in the family works, we can straighten out this tangle in no time. Helen could be the best little wage earner you ever saw in your life."

"Helen! Helen could be the best little wage earner on earth!" Bob echoed the words angrily. As he faced Zoe at last, she saw that there was unmasked horror in his expression. "We don't know where Helen is. She disappeared yesterday."

Zoe stood perfectly still. "Perhaps I could have helped right away, if you'd told me. I want to get in touch with some people I know."

"If you're talking about the police, I've been on touch with them myself for twenty-four hours already. And through them with all the hospitals. She's right here in Washington somewhere. She didn't have any money to get out of it."

"It hasn't occurred to you that she might elope?"

"Elope!"

"Yes, I think she may have run away to marry Alfredo. I think you'll get a wire from her within twenty-four hours that'll clear up everything."

The message which Zoe had foretold came in within the period which she had predicted. He listened incredulously while she read it back from the telephone operator who gave it to her over the wire. "ALFREDO AND I WERE MARRIED HERE IN SAN ANTONIO THIS EVENING. SORRY I HAD TO WORRY YOU. BLISSFULLY HAPPY. LOVE TO YOU ALL. LETTER FOLLOWS."

It was Zoe who did the driving when they went to Berryville on Saturday and Bob fell asleep on the seat beside her. As they turned into the driveway at Hunter's Green, he roused himself long enough to say that he did not see how he could possibly keep awake through dinner.

"I wouldn't try, if I were you. We'll go straight up to our room, and then I'll go down again without you. I'll ask Ronnie to send you up a snack. I'll try not to disturb you when I come up."

When Bob waked from his dead sleep about two o'clock, she had coffee in a thermos bottle and chicken sandwiches ready to offer him. He devoured them, with hardly a word, and instantly went to sleep again. When he waked the next time, he asked a lazy question. "Are you just starting out on your ride?"

"No. I'm just back from it. How do you feel?"

"Grand, thanks to you. Zoe, is there any news?"

"Loads. Here's a letter I know you'll want to see first, that came special delivery about an hour ago. It was addressed to both of us, so I opened it. Shall I read it aloud to you?"

"Good gosh, yes!"

Dearest Zoe and Bob, the letter began,

I'm afraid I've caused everyone an awful lot of worry and trouble, but I just couldn't help doing what I did. It was this way: The longer I was separated from Alfredo, the surer I was that I couldn't stand being away from him forever or even indefinitely. finally I decided I'd have to put an end to our separation. I thought maybe Alfredo would met me if I got part way. I didn't dare tell any of you what I was going to do, because I knew you would try to stop me, and I didn't dare write to Alfredo before I left either, because if I had he would have answered, and I have noticed that strange things have happened to letters from him sometimes. But I looked at maps and timetables and things and bought a ticket. I didn't try to pack anything, because I thought I might get caught doing that. So I just got out of my taxi on my way to the station and got myself a fitted suitcase and a little round patent hatbox with what I needed to go in them. Then I caught my train and the first time it stopped long enough I wired Alfredo and said CAN YOU MEET ME IN SAN ANTONIO AND MARRY ME? PLEASE ANSWER CARE OF PULLMAN TICKET OFFICE UNION STATION, ST. LOUIS, ADDRESSING MESSAGE TO MISS SADIE JOENES.

I had just about enough money in my savings-bank account to get a one way coach ticket to San Antonio. But I thought one of you might find out if I took money from the bank. So I decided to borrow what I needed. I thought Giles would lend it to me, and he did.

Of course I knew Giles was staying in the apartment next to ours. And one day when I met him I asked him if he would let me come into his apartment and talk to him for a few minutes. He said he would be very glad to have me. And after we were comfortably seated I said, if he were willing, he could lend me two hundred dollars. He said that he was very much touched because I had thought of him and that of course he wouldn't breathe a word to a soul. While he was talking he took a wallet and handed me some bills. He said he thought I'd better have an extra hundred while I was about it.

NATIONAL SELECTIVE SERVICE

Farmers and Farm Workers
If Your Farm Work has Slackened for the Winter, You are Needed Elsewhere in Essential Employment
LACK of fuel wood will be serious to our population. A shortage of saw-logs and other forest products would threaten our war effort. Woods operations and other essential industries varying with the district—base metals and coal mining, railway track work; longshore work, meat and fish packing—face Winter labour shortages. Therefore, any man on the farm not needed at home during the Fall and Winter, should offer his services at once for work in one of these other essential industries until the farm again requires him. Men on the land available for the Winter are the Nation's chief hope for securing the needed workers.
Farmers engaged in essential work during the off season will be allowed to return home when needed. Also, those on postponement under Mobilisation Regulations will continue on postponement while in approved essential work during the slack on the farm.
