LETTER OF SYMPATHY

To Mrs. Pound and family, Glen Valley, P. E. I.

The the officers and members of the Glen Valley Women's Institute wish to express to you our deepest sympathy in this your hours of sore bereavement and deepest sorrow in the death of your beloved husband and father.

We do not do this lightly for we feel your sorrow is too sacred a one thus entered into these and numberless sorrows on earth beyond the reach of all elevation but we have a heart which is touched with the feeling of our sorrows the tender love and sympathy of a Christening Heavenly Father is thine. Lest His willingness and ability to sustain and comfort thee often think of death as coming to separate and destroy let us hear the voice of Jesus saying you are but coming to me for I will give you life and give it more abundant. While your dear husband sojourned among us he proved himself to be a model neighbour and a viliant defender of the faith not alone by his words, but by his deeds and he was always willing to do his part for the betterment of the community. When our loved ones are taken from our homes it is hard but it should draw us closer to the love of our Master the one in whom you trust may be comfort your broken hearts and may you lean on Him for strength to bare your sorrows for He has promised to never leave nor forsake those who put their trust in him.

Signed on behalf of the Glen Valley Women's Institue.

The Night of the Wedding

By C. N. and A.M. WILLIAMSON

Authors of "The Lightning Conductor" and other fascinating romances of mystery and love

Copyright 1924, by Public Ledger Company

She was wild with rage and humiliation that she married a tenor in the same opera company who'd been hopelessly in love with her before the Englishman came along. He was a very poor match—shiftless and without much talent. They led a cat and dog life. That was the history of poor Paolo's childhood.. What a sweet nature he must have had not to be embittered, and to be as devoted to his English cousin as he is, instead of brooding over what might have been."

"Yes, fine of him!" agreed Dagon

"Paolo has often told us about his wretched childhood, poor and neglected by his parents. He's quite frank—not a snobbish bone in his body! He isn't sure that his father wasn't actually mixed up with the Camorra—that terrible secret society in Naples which does every sort of crime and sends the "Black Hand" to America."

"You are right, Mrs. Payntor, it's mighty romantic," said the detective, delighted with the way that things were going.

"It would make a scenario plot for one of Mr. Magnani's screen plays."

"Wouldn't it? And all that came after."

"What did come after?" Dagon asked innocently. "I don't quite know."

"Well, Paolo used to sing in Italian cafes, and weird places like that to get money for his training. When he's saued up something he began to study for the operatic stage, and had glorious prospects, with his looks and voice. But then he got ill, as I told you. His voice was injured. The poor fellow was in despair, and thought of killing himself; but just then—and that was like a play, where everything happens at exactly the right time! —his cousin, Rawdon Wells, came to Italy on purpose to look him up. He—Don Wells—had finished his course at Oxford and was free to travel. He'd always wanted to find Paolo since his mother—when she was dying, I fancy—told him the trick she'd played on her sister Francesca. Paolo and he were about the same age. Don insisted upon settling an allowance on his cousin, and invited him to come to England. They took a trip together to New York, too; and that's where Paolo got his first start in the moving pictures. What a pity we didn't meet them then! But we were in the South, and Eve was still a child."

"What an interesting story!" Dagon flattered the little lady. "I'm quite thrilled. Truth is stranger than fiction, Mr. Magnani must have made a fortune for himself as an actor."

"Not a fortune, I'm afraid," sighed Mrs. Payntor. "I expect poor Paolo is rather generous and extravagant.

"Why, for example, he's away now, doing a picture in a wild part of Skye—has been there since Eve's wedding day—started directly after—but look at these lovely roses, my favorites! He has ordered three dozen to come to me every day. I hate to have him spend the money, they're so expensive now But what can I do?"

"What, indeed?" laughed Dagon. "Well, that settles one question for me, which I meant to ask you."

"What question," she inquired curiously.

"You won't think me impudent if I tell you,"

"Of course not! We're old friends. You did me a great favor once. Ask any question you like."

"I don't need to ask it now. I was wondering—in my detective metier, you know—if Mr. Magnani had been one of Miss Carroll's admirers before her marriage. But a man isn't in love with one woman and sending such flowers every day to another!"

"Oh, do you think that?" breathed Mrs. Payntor in ecstasy. "Well, I used to fancy he liked Eve. He came often with Don, when Don's affair with her was in full blast. And he sometimes looked at her as if—but then, most of men looked at Eve. I never saw a girl more attractive to men. I had an idea it was that wonderful perfume of hers that added to her fascination. She never would tell even me what it was made of. But—well—I tried to console Paolo when I thought he was feeling down on his luck. And anyhow, he has seemed grateful."

Dagon thought hard for a minute. Eve was much richer as well as much younger and prettier than her Aunt Jean; still, Mrs. Payntor wouldn't make a bad "second fiddle."

She was hurrying on, however, with her history of Paolo, as though she had read the detective's mind.

"If Rawdon died unmarried—or even now, if Eve doesn't come back and he never marries, Paolo will be a very happy rich man, so he doesn't need to be a fortune hunter" she said. "Rawdon has made a will leaving everything, even Hidden Hall Court, to Paolo if he himself dies a bachelor. (He can leave the Court as he likes, you see, because he's absolutely the last of his line). And if he has no heir of his own, it's really quite fair he should wish to make up to Paolo for the past."

"Oh quite, quite!" murmured Dagon. "And where do you say Mr. Magnani has been since the day of the wedding?"

"In Skye."

"You are quite certain he's been there ever since, and is there still?"

"Entirely certain," said Mrs. Payntor, with modest triumph, "because he wires me every day, without fail."

Dagon did not answer. This reply of hers had been a blow to his theory. It was tottering. It might have to fall.

That same night Dagon went back to Essex with haste, and was given quarters at the Court. Every one there knew that he was a detective but he had a way of ingratiating himself with each member of the household, no matter how humble, making him or her believe that every one else was under suspicion.

His mission being frank and above board, he could go where he pleased, do what he pleased and ask what questions he pleased without arousing resentment.

There were few old servants indoors at the Court, since Mrs. Jenkins, the late housekeeper, had been obliged to leave and Davis, the butler, had been replaced by Marianti. None of the new ones had seen much, if anything of Pandora Haste; but Mrs. Gillett and her daughter both remarked the likeness between the girl and the detective.

Sleeping Beauty

THE TIME COMES

The Sleeping Beauty lay in her palace and the years passed by. Long since, the people of the country had forgotten the story about her, and no one knew anything about the mysterious palace whose towers could sometimes be seen from the nearby hills.

And the hundred years drew near their end.

Now it happened that in a neighboring country there lived a daring young prince. He was as lighthearted and kind as he was brave and all his people loved him.

One day he called some of the young men of the court to him and ordered them to get ready to go on a hunting trip with him. He was tired of pleasures of the court.

(Color the prince's hair with your black crayon. Make his suit blue. Now paste him on light-weight cardboard and cut him out. There will be more story and a new suit for him tomorrow.)

If Kidneys Bother Try Dose of Salts

Drink Quart of Water if Your Back Hurts or Bladder Troubles

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Too much rich food creates acids which clog the kidney pores so that they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons into mthe blood. Then you get sick. Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage, or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin to drink soft water in quantities; also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for years to help flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad-Salts is inexpensive and can not injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone can take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby often preventserious kidney complications. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

United Church Is Strongest In Toronto

TORONTO, Feb. 24—Within the bounds of the Toronto presbytery the United Church of Canada will be by long odds the most powerful of the Protestant bodies when it takes form on June 10, according to the predictions of leading unionists.

This is despite the fact that up to date the anti-unionists have swung 50 preaching places out of the union. Some of these may later on decide to come into the United Church, and the way will be open to them at any time, but taking the figures as they are the churches and mission stations of the United Church in and around Toronto will be about four times as numerous as those of the non-concurrents.

Taking the area of the Toronto presbytery as the district affected, the relative strength of the three denominations uniting is about as follows:

Presbyterians	111
Methodists	125
Congregationalists	5
Total	241

Taking the fifty points which have gone anti-union out of this total leaves 191, and it is said that the non-concurrents have now shown practically all their strength in and around Toronto.

Quite a number of the places listed in both the Methodist and Presbyterian columns are augmented charges of missions, and many of these Presbyterian places will come into union without a vote.

Peters Road And Vicinity

The dramatic and musical talent of "Peters Road and vicinity" repeated their program to a large and appreciative audience at Murray River hall on the 11th inst. Notwithstanding the bad conditions of the roads the hall was fairly well filled and the program as before excellently rendered. The proceeds amounted to $47.

The recent "thaw" which provided a much needed increase of water for the depleted power of many of our mills, proved disastrous to the mill-dam of Mr. Josiah Jenkins. The unfortunate incident will put Mr. Jenkin's Mill "Hors de Combat" for some time.

February seems to be the month for moving hay. Many teams laden with immense masses of this commodity pass along. Sometimes they come in too close proximity to the winter position of the mail boxes, still the (the drivers go along smiling (unconsciously).

In regard to the question of purchasing at home or abroad it is pleasing to note that many of our farmers who have a surplus of hay, grain and etc., open out quite readily. That's right farmers, keep the prices right, create a home market, and thus keep the dollar home if possible.

We regret to state that Mr. A. J. McInnis Custom's Officer and Clerk of the Court at Murray is seriously ill. Mr. Mcnnis is one of our oldest citizens, and admirably links the historic past with the present. His remarkable ability as a conversationalist and writer along educative and political lines of the old and new school, place him amongst the foremost in this part of the province. We heartily wish him a speedy recovery.

Mr. J. Herbert Campbell of Allistion, who with his family, had removed to the United States some time ago, has returned home. It is pleasing to learn that their little daughter—Miss Marion is much improved from her recent attack of pneumonia.

Miss Ethel Horton of Murray River has been spending a few days with her friends in Peters Road and vicinity.

Skating is a very popular pastime here just now, and some of our young people show remarkable skill in the graceful sport.

Three of our young ladies of a venturous spirit had a rather unpleasant experience while skating on one of our ponds recently. The ice being thin, one of them went plump in, and the other two while extricating the submerged, suffered a like fate. They arrived home in a rather bedraggled condition, but happily nothing worse for the chilling experience.

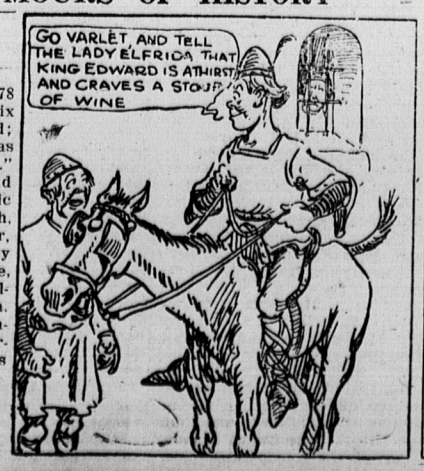
MORE HUMOURS OF HISTORY

By ARTHUR MORELAND

No. 27. Cursed at His Coronation


From 941 to 978 there were six Kings of England; they are known as "The Boy Kings." They came and went with tragic rapidity. The fifth, Edward the Martyr, was stabbed by order of Elfride, whose son, Ethelred succeeded him. Dunstan, now Archbishop of Canterbury, cursed him as he crowned him.
