MAYTIME—AND THE WHOLE WORLD THROBING WITH LIFE

CHAPTER III.

It was in May that I first met Everett Graham. For several days it had been unusually warm. The leaves on the trees and shrubs had stolen silently from their winter hiding places, and were bursting brightly green on their stalks and branches. It seemed to me that the whole world was throbbing with life, was more keenly alive than ever it had been before.

I was just a girl that wonderful Maytime, with just a girl's visions, her ideas, and ideals. The books I had read were mostly light novels, and romances which exaggerated those ideas without doing me any particular good or harm. Yet in a way I realized that they helped me to overcome the difference in our ages. Many of the heroines of the novels I had read had married men much older than they, and had been happy ever after—according to the narrator.

I had always liked my name: Sandra. Rose said it sounded as if I was a writer and had taken it as my real de p name. Rose often said such queer things, although she was a perfect dear. But after she said that I liked my name better than ever—Sandra Courtney. When I said it aloud, I was pleased with the sound and glad I hadn't been named Mary or Margaret or Nellie. I liked my own name so much better.

I have told how Everett looked, and I expect people who read my story would like to know something of how I looked also.

I was tall—taller than most of my friends. I was thin, almost scrawny. Everett called it "willowy" which sounded much nicer. My hair was very dark and curly, deep red-gold in some lights. I often used to wish that whatever pigment had been used—they say that's what causes different colors in hair—had not been used quite so lavishly. People could see my hair before they saw me. So Rose said, I had the brownish eyes, and the light skin that usually goes with such hair. And I also had—freckles. I had tried to get rid of them in every possible way since I was ten, but although I had taken off the skin many times, the freckles persisted. They were lighter in color now, and smaller. Mother said that when I was older they would probably disappear altogether. But they were a great trial to me. My two brothers made fun of me for trying to get rid of them, so I finally I stopped. But I commenced again that spring of Mr. Everett—but with no success.

Sometimes I used to think that having brothers was not an unalloyed joy. I was sure of it the day they told Everett that I was putting on stuff to get rid of the freckles because he came to see me.

"Sandra is putting stuff on her face because of you." Toodles, his right name was Harry, confided to Everett. "She's done it before and it didn't work worth a cent; but she thinks you'll think she's prettier without freckles. Girls is silly anyway. Freckles don't hurt."

Buster, my other brother, his right name was Charles, wasn't quite so bad, yet he also often said frightfully embarrassing things. Rose Grandon hadn't any brothers, and once I was so exasperated I told her she ought to be thankful she hadn't. I used to urge mother to punish them, but she said all boys who had young lady sisters were just like Toodles and Buster. I didn't wonder sometimes when they had been worse than usual that boys were said to be made of "scissors and snails and puppy dog tails" or something equally horrid.

Of course, they weren't like that all the time. When they were good I was really fond of them. Toodles was fourteen, and Buster was twelve, I guess those are rather bad ages for boys. "Neither lay or grass" father had said once when I begged him to make them behave.

Everett seemed to like them, and was quite nice to them, so they didn't play any more tricks, or tell tales about me while he stayed. When he got back to New York he sent Tood-les a fishing rod and tackle, and Buster a big push wagon for which he had expressed a wish—expressed it loudly. But it made things very comfortable for me because if the boys commenced to act badly I threatened to tell Mr. Graham.

Tomorrow—Everett Surprises Sandra With a Letter.

Miller's Worm Powders, being in demand everywhere, can be got at any chemist's or drug shop, at very small cost. They are a standard remedy for worm troubles and can be fully relied upon to expel worms from the system and abate the sufferings that worms cause. There are many Mothers that rejoice that they found available so effective a remedy for the relief of their children.

LIFT OFF CORNS!

Freezone is magic! Corns lift off with fingers without pain

Hurt? No, not one bit! Just drop a little Freezone on that touchy corn, instantly it stops aching, then you lift that bothersome corn right off. Yes, it's magic! Costs only a few cents.

Try Freezone! Your druggists sell a tiny bottle, sufficient to rid your feet of every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and calluses, without one particle of pain, soreness or irritation. Freezone is the mysterious other discovery of a Cincinnati genius.

The Robinson Circus

That cleanliness is next to Godliness is exemplified around the John Robinson circus, which will exhibit in Borden Friday, July 4th. The daily rule is in effect with the show and this rule hits the animals as well as the men.

Early in the morning of arrival, after the wagons and cages have all been drawn to the grounds and satisfying breakfast has been served, comes the bath hour. In the horse department Charles Rooney, the superintendent uses nearly two hundred cakes of white soap. Every horse and pony is washed from the tips of its ears to the end of its tail. Superintendent Chris Zeitl of the menagerie, uses castile soap on the majority of the animals under his care. Some of the latter are so vicious that they cannot be handled, but they are given a bath, just the same. Water is poured in on them from a hose. The cages are thoroughly scrubbed and deodorized and then the beasts are given clean beds of sweet smelling straw.

The seals and hippopotamus are given fresh water in their tanks and refer like human beings in the bath. "Congo," the baby "hip" spends hours each day in his private bath. He sleeps peacefully in the water during the hot hours.

Every man with the big show is given to understand that he must bathe. Soap, towels and hot water are supplied by "Governor" Robinson and the men are told quietly, but firmly, to get busy. If they refuse they do not remain long with the circus.

Dear Sirs.—This fall I got thrown on a fence and hurt my chest very bad, so I could not work and it hurt me to breathe. I tried all kinds of Liniments and they did me no good. One bottle of MINARD'S LINIMENT, warmed on flannels and applied on my breast, cured me completely.

He was a good little boy, very thoughtful. It was during a long spell of dry weather, and he heard the great scarcity of water through the country. He came to his mother and slipped his hand into hers.

"Mamma," he said, "is it true that in some places the little boys and girls have not enough water to drink?"

"That is what the papers say, my dear."

"Mamma," he presently said, "like to give something for those poor little boys and girls."

"Yes, dear. What would you like to give?"

"Mamma," he said, in an earnest way, "as long as the water is so very scarce, I think I ought to give them washed."

The accordion played skirt suits never to go out of fashion.
