

Snowy white without boiling

THAT dull, grey, streaky look that you always had to boil out of your clothes is never there when you use Rinso. It soaks the dirt, softens it, loosens it so thoroughly that it all runs away in the rinsing, leaving the clothes sweet, snowy-white and fresh as new.

It's because Rinso is the new, modern scientific washing preparation that works in an entirely new way. It washes by soaking. It is altogether different from ordinary soaps and washing powders. So, it should be used differently. Do not pour Rinso itself into the tub. Make your Rinso liquid first, as per directions.

IF YOU USE A WASHING MACHINE Soak your clothes in the Rinso suds as usual—for one hour, two hours, overnight, or whatever time is convenient. Then add more Rinso solution and work the machine. Rinse and dry—you'll have a clean, sweet, snowy-white wash.

Chapter 102.

"This is really beginning life," said Pan as they settled themselves in a hotel suite in the city after their brief trip to the "farm."

"Why do you wait until now to say life is beginning?" George asked with some amazement, watching her unlock a suitcase and daintily place piles of garments in a bureau drawer. "You've been married more than a week. Life is at least that old for me."

"Oh, that was only a honey moon!" Pan dismissed it lightly. "That wasn't being really married. This is much more like it. We've three rooms all to ourselves, at least a house in fact."

"Almost," George laughed, lounging against the window and watching her at work. "Which reminds me that I must cable my aunt the day of our arrival, so she'll have time to settle herself."

"Settle herself?" Pan perched herself on the arm of a chair, looking distressed. "Of course! But I'm depriving her of a home—that seems so dreadful. Couldn't she stay? She's looked after you for years. She'll hate me now for putting her out."

"She won't!" George assured her. "She thinks all men are selfish, though I'm less so than the average. Her ideal in life is a manless home, all tummy cats and spinsters, with occasional lecture tours to women's clubs. The horse and dog friends in the country are as railway porters."

Pan laughed a bit. George's attitude herself very well when she travelled, she was a fashion as well as a social and educational lecturer to the clubs she lectured in. Pan had once seen her departure for a tour, with two trunks, two suitcases, a small valise, and a blanket roll, a maid and the maid's luggage and an army of porters.

"She won't mind. She's always wanting to live at a woman's club," George went on. "Her conscience bothered her about me. That's one reason why she stayed on."

"Well," Pan was partly satisfied. She returned to her unpacking, directing her attentions to George's luggage.

"It seems odd to handle masculine shirts and collars," she said. "Yours are so much larger than Frankie's."

"It's a shame for you to bother," George was apologetic. "When I'm home, I've got a man who will do all that."

"I like it," his wife answered. "There's something romantic about it, just because these things belong to you. Once I helped Aunt Maude unpack for Gladys and Morton, while we were settling their house and they were away on their honeymoon. It seemed almost a sacrilegious familiarity for me to touch his shirts and ties, but Aunt Maude had no such delicacy. She paused, smiling.

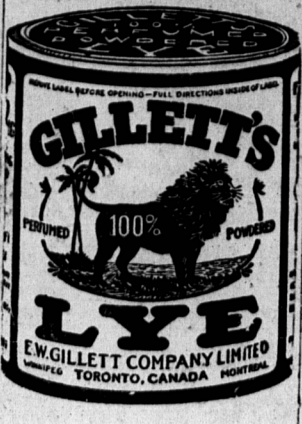

"They were mostly lavender stripes too, and he had redish hair."

George gave a shout of laughter and came to her from the window, putting his hands on her shoulder.

"When a woman criticizes a man's taste in ties and shirts, she's no longer in love with him," he exclaimed. "Pan, do you like what I have?"

"Yes," she agreed, turning her face so he could kiss her mouth. "I like everything about you. Now run on to your club, or somewhere. I'm going to Mrs. Clarke's to have tea and get Frankie."

He watched her up the street, pleased at feeling such complete possession of the slim little figure, the whimsical find, the sweet earnestness that made up the sum of Pan. Then he swung out of his club, and forked Pan and every other woman in a game of billiards with a skilled opponent. But even when he wasn't consciously thinking of her, unconsciously, she was in his mind, a little current of her wishes and sayings, a certain efflu quality he vainly longed for, giving of herself to him—a current of thoughts like these flowing on steadily under his conscious thinking and made him happier than he had ever been, and completely contented.

When he came back, Pan was giving Frankie the latest news of the horse and dog friends in the country.

"And I've arranged for a large and expensive dinner party for all our friends the night before we sail," she told him. "This is really being married, isn't it—giving dinners and being called 'madam' by the waiters?"

"Is it?" asked George smiling. "Being married is coming home to find you waiting."

On the ship, they found the same two critical women who had gossiped about Gloria. It was the only unpleasant touch, for Pan felt their eyes boring through her whenever she passed with George. She guessed that they knew she was newly married, but they were not so kindly, their idea was that the "woman with the dyed hair" as they referred to her, had deserted Europe in this short time, and was going back with a jumbled impression of cathedrals and castles, cities and mountains, peasants and strange that all "foreigners" were queer.

It was when Pan stood in the studio, watching trunks being carried into bedrooms, that she remarked again:

"We're really home now. This is beginning life, isn't it dear?"

IN MEMORIAM

HECTOR A. McFADYEN

The death took place at Toronto, Ont., on July 22, of Hector A. McFadyen, only son of Angus McFadyen of St. Catherine's, P. E. Island.

While the late Mr. McFadyen had been in failing health for several months, he had only entered hospital a week previous to his death and the end came unexpectedly.

A brief service was held in Toronto on Monday afternoon, July 24th, attended by immediate friends there and conducted by Rev. T. W. Goodwill, formerly of P. E. Island, who also visited the late Mr. McFadyen in his illness.

The remains were forwarded to his native Province next morning and arrived Wednesday night July 27th.

The deceased was a post master of Hamilton, L. O. L. Clyde River P. E. Island. He will be remembered as a fine, clean manly young man, well liked by all who knew him. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife, formerly Miss Marjorie McPhee of Charlottetown and three children.

ALLAN MacLEAN.

There departed this life at Canoe Cove on the 12th of July 1922, Allan MacLean, DeSable at the advanced age of 81 years. He was in failing health since February last. Although up in years, hopes for his recovery were held out, until a short while before his death. He was visiting his daughter where he was lovingly nursed and cared for and every thing possible was done by his family in prolonging his days but God willed otherwise.

He was a man of sterling qualities, a kind and affectionate father, a good neighbor and a true friend. His word was always as good as his bond. An evidence of the esteem in which he was held by friends who came from far and near to visit him in his last illness. He was a consistent member of the Church of Scotland and always proved true to her doctrine and policy. Being a good man he delighted in the services and ordinances of the church and was never absent when it was possible for him to attend.

The funeral took place from his son-in-law's residence to a large cemetery and was largely attended, there being upwards of one hundred carriages. The services were conducted by the Rev. Ewen MacDougall who also visited him during his illness.

He was twice married first to Miss Lucy Easton, North Wiltshire and afterwards to Miss Mary MacEachern, Canoe Cove, who also predeceased him 21 years ago. He leaves to mourn besides a large circle of relatives and friends, two sons and two daughters, Mary, Mrs. Wm Taylor Saskatchewan; Annie, Mrs. J. A. MacKinnon, Canoe Cove; John in Providence, R. I. and Donald on the homestead in DeSable also one brother, Angus MacLean, DeSable.
