The Knocking

Dagon had tried the gardeners, asking if the place had been rent or let, and whether—as it was so picturesque—moving pictures of it had been taken, say, by the company of which Mr. Magnani was a star. But the men who had been on the spot through the war years were old, and discreet or forgetful. The Masseur's "business" was to strike a bargain with Pandora's trustee. She was to tell him all she knew about—Rawdon Wells and Eye Carroll, including the evidence which might connect Rawdon with Eye's disappearance. Pan was also formally to take back in writing her confession of guilt. She was to state on oath that she had made this confession in the hope of saving Wells, but that, on second thoughts, she found it impossible to continue her perjury. She was to add that she had escaped from the police station through the connivance of a friend and that she intended to keep out of the way until the trial of Sir Rawdon was over. This to avoid being called upon as a witness.

In return for writing such a letter Pan would be released by the Masseur from her prison under the pool and placed in a comfortable, commonplace farmhouse, where the only restraint would be her own word of honor. Later she would be freed. If she refused to comply with these terms, she would be kept where she was for an indefinite length of time. Her obstinacy would benefit no one, as in prison she could not again testify in favor of Wells, and her escape from the police station at Ardyale Mare would be taken to mean that she had fled and was afraid of being found out. Besides the Masseur hinted the time might come when it would be inconvenient to retain her in her present quarters. It would, however, be still more inconvenient to set her free if she were an avowed enemy. As to the alternative, she might draw her own conclusions.

"I have said that I would not harm you except under great provocation," the man reminded the girl. "But if you insist on giving me great provocation—you know the saying, 'Safety first!' I might be obliged to rid myself of a menace. 'Meaning me?' Pandora asked. 'Meaning you.'"

"How would you do it?" she catechized him. "If you let the water in here, you'd spoil all the nice tapestries and valuable old furniture. As you keep the place for your bachelor quarters, that wouldn't suit you, would it?"

"Such means would not be necessary. The hidden family, who designed and made this secret place, didn't lose sight of the need for suppressing a prisoner occasionally. They knew how to utilize the water without letting it damage their property."

"This hint chilled Pandora's spine more keenly than if the man had described the plan for eliminating superstitious persons. Her imagination supplied the details. She could see herself, bound and gagged, shot up into the deep green water of the pool, as men were sometimes short through the conning-tower of a submerged submarine.

Sleeping Beauty

A STRANGE SIGHT

A big, fierce looking gray dog stood guard in the palace gate. The prince started toward him, his sword in his hand. The dog, however, did not move, even when the prince came quite close. He seemed to be asleep, standing up. "This is certainly very queer," remarked the prince to himself, but he pushed on through the golden gate to the castle and stepped right into the great hall. The place was full of ladies and gentlemen, some standing up and some of them sitting down, but every single one was sound asleep. Full of curiosity, the prince went on to explore the rest of the palace.

The white chiffon costume has three-quarter sleeves, a deep V neckline and a high girle of huge velvet daisies.

UNLINED COATS

MORE HUMOURS OF HISTORY

Ethelred died in 1016 and his son, Edmund "Ironside" was proclaimed King, Canute, who had succeeded Sweyn, immediately declared war, and it is said the two rivals met in single combat. By agreement, the sovereignty was divided, but soon after Edmund died at the hands of the traitor, Edric, who, when he asked Canute to reward him, met the fate depicted above.

MILLIONAIRE'S WIFE ON HUNGER STRIKE IN HIS APARTMENT

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—The marital difficulties of an oil magnate and his wife, providing comedy and tragedy, held the attention of the city today. The interest centred in the voluntary incarceration of Mrs. Milton J. Budlong in a room in her husband's apartment, where she has been on a hunger strike since last Friday. The oil magnate's wife invaded the apartment following the loss of her suit for separation. She says she is trying to prevent her husband from securing grounds for a divorce on the grounds of desertion. The husband and a 22-year-old daughter are living away from home.

KEEPING PUBLIC INFORMED

Notes written on Mr. Budlong's shirts and thrown from the apartment window six storeys up have kept the newspapers and the public informed of the progress of the feud. Mrs. Budlong has asserted that she will maintain her post until she is physically unable to. To-day she shouted through the apartment door for a doctor. At the same time workmen were installing telegraph instruments and desks in the apartment, said to be a move suit for the husband's part to turn the dwelling into an office and thus vacate any claim of the wife to occupancy of a room. Hawkers in the street below the apartment mingled with the crowds and sold "Budlong's shirts" for 98

Presbyterians Will Return With Their Tails Down

(Special to the Guardian) TORONTO.—Mr. Lewis Mulligan, publicity agent of the Unionists, writes: Rev. Dr. Douglas Fraser, the veteran ex-dictor and founder of Presbyterian publications commenting in the course of an interview today on the loss of Union of many congregations in Ontario said it reminded him of the story of "Little Bo Peep" Who Lost Her Sheep. "Leave them alone," and "They'll come home bringing their you know the rest," he said as he sat with a quiet smile on his face and a far off look in his eyes which have been sightless for the past two or three years. It may take five years as it has taken fifteen or twenty years but twenty years is a brief period in the life of a church they'll come home he said in a calm and confident voice.

Canadian Fish Satisfactory

(Canadian Press)

MONTREAL, Feb. 26.—That the Canadian fresh fish can be marketed in England and great developments may be expected in this trade in the near future was a statement made by W. T. Marlow, General Freight Agent of the C. P. R., who received the news today that a trial shipment of fresh fish from St. John to England had been satisfactorily marketed at Billingsgate. The idea was furthered later by Major Hugh Green who came here from England to attempt development of fresh fish shipments to England. A steady line of fish-carrying steamers prophesied for the near future.
