A Wise Decision

In many deals the declarer must decide whether to try for the establishment of a long side suit, or to look for sufficient tricks through a cross-ruff. In today's deal South wisely decided in favor of the cross-ruff.

South dealer.

The bidding:
 South West North East
 1 Pass 3 Pass
 4 Pass Pass Pass

South opened the bidding properly with one heart instead of one diamond because this would allow him to show both suits in natural order, if the necessity arose, rather than have to "reverse the bidding."
 West opened his fourth-highest club. Dummy's ace won and the singleton spade was led toward the closed hand. East put up the ace and cashed the king of clubs, but declarer of course ruff'd. At this point there were two ways to play the contract. One was to attempt the establishment of the diamond suit while maintaining trump control and drawing the opponent's trumps; the other was to make as many tricks as could be made by cashing high cards and then restoring to a cross-ruff. In view of the sketchiness of the diamond suit, and in further view of the danger of trying to draw trumps, South made the sound decision to cash his king and queen of spades, discarding diamonds from dummy, then to lay down the diamond ace.

A diamond was now ruffed in dummy with the heart four, and a club in the closed hand with the heart nine. When South led another diamond, West forced dummy's trump ace by putting in the eight, but this did not bother South at all. He ruffed another club, with the heart jack and led his next-to-last diamond. West was helpless. He could ruff high if he chose, but this would do no material good.
