

THE CHARLOTTETOWN GUARDIAN

WEDNESDAY, MAY 11, 1910.

AN ENGLISH ESTIMATE OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

From the time of his inauguration as President of the United States, through his extended term of office, and since during his notable hunting tour in Africa Theodore Roosevelt has successfully kept himself in the world's lime-light.

Now he is touring Europe, a welcome and entertaining visitor at national capitals and royal palaces, hobnobbing with Emperors, Kings, Grand Dukes and Ministers of State and from time to time addressing scientific or national societies, or great public audiences of the elite on varied topics of more or less universal interest.

CURED OF LAME BACK WHEN 84 YEARS OLD

Anyone, seeing Mr. Samuel Martin, of Stratford, Ont., for the first time, would guess his age at about 60 years, instead of eighty-four. He has spry on his feet as a child and the picture of health.

The London Chronicle attempts to answer these questions, but first sets out what Mr. Roosevelt is not. 'He is not a deep or a subtle thinker. His lecture in Paris * * * was little more than a string of eminently estimable platitudes, yet it thrilled the audience to which it was addressed.'

Further on we are told that Mr. Roosevelt is a moralist before all things with a few simple and delicate articles of faith which are easily expounded and easily understood. And his preachings if universally practised would mean a regenerated world.

And here is the Roosevelt mind and creed, and his message to the world, as The Chronicle sees it: 'The truth is in part that Mr. Roosevelt brings to the problems of life and conduct and politics, first, a thoroughly fresh, pristine, and elemental type of mind and character; and secondly, the courage to say out loud what most men feel but few men ever whisper; that cynicism is an unlovely attribute; that the mere critic is inclined to be a futile member of society; that the commonplace, everyday qualities and virtues are of more importance than intellect; that every man should have the will and the power to work, to fight and to have plenty of healthy children; that an unjust war is a crime against humanity, not because it is war, but because it is unjust; that the rich man is to be estimated not by the amount of his possessions, but by the use he makes of them, and the manner in which he has earned them; that the orator or the journalist whose words do not make for 'courage, sobriety, and right understanding' is a 'noxious element in the body politic'; and that while human rights and property rights are usually identical, the former, in the event of any conflict, must always prevail over the latter.'

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT MAY BE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The rumor, quite prevalent some months ago, that His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, may be named as the next Governor General of Canada, has been revived since the death of King Edward. It may or may not prove to be true and need not be accepted as such until it shall be officially confirmed.

His Royal Highness, Arthur William Patrick Albert, Duke of Connaught, is a younger brother of the late King Edward and uncle to King George. He was born May 1, 1850, and was married in 1879 to Princess Louise Margaret, daughter of the late Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia. They have one son and two daughters, the elder daughter being married to the Crown Prince of Sweden.

There is no doubt that at the outset, at least, the appointment of a Prince of the blood royal would be popular in Canada. Here and there throughout the Dominion there have been budding movements to ask the Home Government to appoint the Duke of Connaught as successor to Earl Grey. But such action would involve a rather important departure in regard to appointments to the Governorship of overseas Dominions. No member of the royal family has ever been appointed as the Viceroy or Governor General of India, Canada or Australia.

The nearest approach thereto was the appointment of the Marquis of Lorne, son-in-law of Queen Victoria, as Governor General of Canada in 1878. The Marquis and Princess were welcomed to Canada in a very hearty and loyal manner, but Lord Lorne's official term in Canada was not perhaps in all respects so fortuitous and happy as that of Lord Dufferin who preceded him or of Lord Lansdowne who followed him in official rotation.

The appointment of a Prince as Governor General would be, as we have said, a new departure and something of an experiment. That experiment if tried and proved successful, would almost necessarily be followed by like appointments of royal personages as heads of the Australian Commonwealth and the Empire of India in years to come. If, on the other hand, the first appointment of this class turned out unfavorably, there would, in the nature of things, be some impairment of royal prestige, which the reversion to the old order of appointments would afterward accentuate.

It is not improbable that the Home Government may hold to the safer ground of not subjecting any member of the royal family to possible entanglements such as might arise from appointments of the kind referred to. It would seem to be enough that the King shall be required to moderate the counsels of contending parties and factions at home without his near relatives being placed in like difficult positions in the Dominions over sea at the same time.

The appalling list of more than a thousand dead from the recent earthquake in Costa Rica brings again in to notice the perils to life in tropical countries, from which our favored Dominion has been hitherto almost entirely exempt.

When William IV died and Queen Victoria came to the throne it was forty days before the momentous news reached Halifax and still longer before it was known in Charlottetown. The tidings were brought by a sailing packet. There were no electric cables, or swift ocean steamers in those days. The world has moved fast and far since then, yet there are a few persons still living who can remember the beginning of Queen Victoria's reign.

We ought to have some civic inspection of milk and meat such as other cities have. The inspection required in regard to meats exported tends to throw the questionable sort entirely into home consumption. If there is need to protect the foreigner and this seems to be recognised, there is certainly quite as much need to protect our own people in this matter. The City Council should promptly act upon the well-considered advice of Doctors Jenkins, McLaughlin and Yeo tendered at the last meeting.

Thackeray's Four Georges set the earlier Kings of that name in a sadly unfavorable light in literature and before the reading world. There has been no King John in England since more than 700 years ago the monarch of that name rendered it odious to his people, and for a like reason no King of the name of Richard since Richard the Third. The four Georges were not so reprehensible as Thackeray painted them, but King George V shows some courage as well as a disposition to set the name of George in better favor by assuming that title.

Hon. Mr. Cummiskey, on seeing two citizens who had not always been on cordial terms, shaking hands with each other on the street just after King Edward's death, remarked that the sad event was not without its good results both as between individuals and the nations of the earth: 'The sense of sorrow and loss which has overspread the world just now, has certainly tended to a more friendly and sympathetic feeling between the Empires, Kingdoms and Republics. Universal recognition of the ability and worth of Edward the Peacemaker is still a force making for peace after his life has ended. It has been said of Samson, the warrior, that he slew more of his country's foes at his death than in all his life. The like may be said of the Peacemaker as of the warrior.'
