Stock Markets At A Glance

CHICAGO, June 17 — (AP) — Wheat and rye rallied sharply from an early period of easiness yesterday and other grain futures markets were firm to strong. September rye at times was up more than two cents and wheat made important gains.

NEW YORK, June 17 — (AP) — Rail stocks were strong, industrials hesitant and utilities static Saturday but the market finished a generally successful week by touching an eight-year peak in the liveliest Saturday session for better than three years.

The Associated Press 60-stock composite was up .1 of a point at 66.9, another top since Aug. 25, 1937. On the week it gained .9. The rail barometer advanced .7, also to a new high, and for the week was up 1.8 points.

WINNIPEG, June 17 — (CP) — Rye futures prices on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange Saturday were firm to strong in an active session in which both locals and United States houses made purchases. October and December made new seasonal highs, the former at $1.50¾ and the latter at $1.45½. Fairly liberal profit taking was absorbed.

Author Describes Site And Pattern Of Charlottetown

"The site and pattern of Charlottetown" is the subject of an interesting sketch in an article on "Town patterns on the Gulf of St. Lawrence," appearing in the current issue of the Canadian Geographical Journal. The author, Griffith Taylor, D.Sc., B.E. is head of the department of geography at the University of Toronto, and is the author of some twenty books and over a hundred articles dealing with environment control, ethnology, history, and meteorology. His notes on Charlottetown are illustrated by a number of photographs and diagrams.

One of the most interesting features Dr. Taylor finds, is the stationary character of the population of both the Province and the capital. "Hence we may suppose that the city has long reached a state of equilibrium, undisturbed by the overlapping of residential zones which is so marked a feature in most cities of the Old World", he says. "By the year 1863, the houses extended over the whole checkerboard, but no further; and there is very little change since 1863 except near the railway station. Even today little later change is visible in eighty years, except in the growth of a suburb of first and second-class houses along the northern fringe of the city."

The author gives a plan and description of Charlottetown, which he describes as being built "on a promontory on the north side of a trident-shaped estuary." The "checkerboard pattern" of the streets "was carried out ruthlessly, but one improvement was to arrange for four small parks." He finds that the main churches have almost all developed in a belt which includes these parks.

The zones of the city are classified and a diagram given to which the author adds extensive notes. "As is usually the case," he writes "the original houses within the city have declined in status, and are now mainly of third-class character. The better houses are naturally found toward the park, and in the higher land to the northwest and northeast. The wharves and the railway areas have attracted the factories and the poorer houses. This tends to give us a zone of better dwellings about one mile away from the centre of the city. For various reasons institutions such as jails, hospitals, race tracks, etc., are found in an outer zone beyond those so far enumerated." Population figures are given based on the all seven census returns from 1881.

The changes in the character of the city are also illustrated by sketches and photographs. One picture shows the official post office as it appeared from 1780 onward. It was erected close to the shore on Water Street, and torn down in 1834. There is a sketch of the main houses and shops near the junction of Queen and Grafton Streets in 1870, based on illustrations in the old "Prince Edward Island Magazine". Four photographs show various old buildings still visible in the city, including Government House and the Provincial Building, which is described as "a pleasing example of official Renaissance architecture." The city itself is classified by this authority as being "in the 'Early Mature' stage of evolution."

Cornwall

(By F.H. MacArthur)

MONCTON, N.B., June 14 — Hands across the strait, fellow Islanders! Your Cornwall correspondent arrived in Moncton (today) June 14th.

The trip here was uneventful, but there are a few things which might prove interesting, so I shall pass them on to my readers.

The bus which carried us to the town of Borden left our village at approximately 7.20 a.m., reaching Borden in time to catch the nine o'clock ferry.

This new service via the Bonshaw and Victoria route takes the traveller through some of the most picturesque communities to be seen in the Garden of the Gulf.

And on this particular June morning, it was especially lovely, from the rider's point of view. On either side of the highway stretched our green meadows fringed by equally green strips of forests. The rolling plains of the lowlands and higher hills of Bonshaw overlooking the surrounding country and the Northumberland Strait, presents a view that is unsurpassed in any country. As we sped by, herds of contented cattle and sheep gazed at us for a moment and then continued with their meal of lush grass. When one contrasts the difference between our Island and the low wet plains reaching from Tormentine to Moncton — well, you begin to realize what a "Land of hope and promise" God created and cradled on the waves.

At the dock lay the S.S. Prince Edward Island looking for all the world like a new ship with her fresh coat of paint. I was glad it was not the old "Scotia" on which we were about to embark, for I crossed over to the Island in that scow last summer, and believe me, the voyage was anything but pleasant.

• • •

Aboard ship I met the genial captain, the mate, together with most of the crew — old faces that have become quite familiar to me over the years I have been going to and from the Island.

Among the passengers were quite a number of Island folk mostly in the garb of civilians, as well as a sprinkling of servicemen, drifting here and there like Autumn leaves after they have been torn from the mother tree.

Surely thought I, this is a restless age, a time of coming and a time for saying farewells.

Tomorrow or the day after, I expect to meet some Island folk here in Moncton, and tell you about them.

So, in the meantime, au revoir.

COSMOPOLITAN SCENE

The "South American Miss," the "Lass of London," "China Girl" and a host of other United Nations young damsels stepped across the fashion stage. The style show was entitled Fashion Forcasts a World at Peace. The showing was presented recently for delegation officals and their wives attending the United Nations Conference in San Sraancisco.

The be-sequined afternoon dresses, and the filmy evening wear foretold a gay post-war fashion parade. "Liberty" was symbolized by a colorful play suit. A great hit at the show was the "Star of Russia"—a pale grey dress accentuated by the lines of a cossack blouse. There were dinner dresses draped to follow the classic Greek styles. A much-applauded hat was a fuchsia turban affair called "Turkish Fez."
