FIND PORTRAIT CARVED IN RELIEF ON LIMESTONE SLAB

Figure That of Builder King Urengur of Ziggurat of Ur.—Slab Complete Was Five Feet Across and Nearly Fifteen Feet High.

LONDON, April 17.—Fragments of one of the greatest and most splendid works of art in stone that Mesopotamia has yet produced have been found by the joint expedition of the British Museum and the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania.

It is a portrait carved in relief on a limestone slab of the Builder King Urengur of Ziggurat of Ur, and was found in the huge tower of the Moon god, which was laid bare last year with his record of its conception and achievement; 2300 years before Christ.

A statement from Bagdad, issued by the director of the British Museum yesterday, thus describes the slab, which when complete was five feet across, and nearly fifteen feet high:

"In one scene the King receives from his god an order to build a tower. God holds out to him the rod and flaxen line with which Ekekiel, an exile by the waters of Babylon, saw planned out a city in the temple of his dreams. Broken as it is, and in parts much damaged, this stela ranks as one of the finest works of Sumerian art known, and in dramatic interest surpassed by none."

This popularity of these biscuits means employment for Maritime people.

Isolated Farm House Is Retreat Of Writer

NICE, April 17.—H. G. Wells, the writer has been found living in an isolated farm house in a mountain valley behind Cannes.

An interviewer was attracted to the place by the spectacle of a postman staggering under a mass of books, papers and letters—the hermit's morning mail—none of which bore Wells' name, but only that of the Provencal farm house.

"He's an English writer who must be terrified by something or somebody," explained the panting postman. "No one knows his name."

Wells was angered by the discovery. "I merely require several months of absolute solitude to complete work I have had in mind many years," he said. "This is my first visit to the Riviera, and it is wonderful—up here away from it all."

Wells then switched zealously to the French crisis in reply to a suggestion that he is the sworn enemy of France.

"I criticized France not as an Englishman, but as a liberal critic of all reaction he responded. "It is nonsense to say that people may not criticize another country to which they are virtually linked. It is necessary, though one can afford to be polite and eulogize distant States. Personally I am convinced that the property of England and France belongs to the other."

"I am also convinced that France by temperament situation and tradition is a born mediator between the peoples of North and South Europe and that the English are coming to give increasing attention to this basic truth."

PREDICTS BIG FRANCO-GERMAN CRISIS

PARIS, April 17.—It was learned today that Marshal Foch has sent to the Council of Ambassadors his final report on the inter-Allied survey of German armaments. The report contains a statement by General Degoutte, for a long time commander of the armies of occupation predicting a most serious crisis between France and Germany about 1928, when under the provisions of the Dawes plan Germany must begin to make cash payments to the Allies. Basing his predictions on his experience in Germany and evidence he found of the prevalence of the alleged spirit of revenge among the German people, he urged the Allies to take special attention to the semi-military training organizations of the Reich which have many hundreds of thousands of adherents.

Foch's report comprises forty-four typewritten pages, setting forth in what respects the findings of the Allied military experts show that Germany has violated the military clauses of the Treaty of Versailles, and giving a list of recommendations as to what the Allies should require of the Reich. A section on German aviation, it is said, outlining the rapid increase in German air development, showing that the Germans control a number of airplane factories in neighboring countries. According to the report, all the war air pilots of Germany are either in training or employed on German commercial air lines.

It is expected the conference of ambassadors will soon hold a meeting to consider the report. Two questions of major importance hinge on its consideration, first, the evacuation of Cologne, which was delayed beyond January 10th last because of the revelations of the Allied inspection; and, secondly, the entry of Germany into the League of Nations if being insisted by the French that the Reich satisfy the military clauses of the Treaty of Versailles before being admitted to the Geneva organizations.
