"TRADE SPYING" IN GERMANY
"ECONOMIC HIGH TREASON"

Object of New Law Which Government is Drafting and Which Reichstag and National Council Will be Asked to Pass.

BERLIN, Nov. 29.—"Trade spying" in Germany will constitute "economic high treason" in a new law, which the Government is drafting and which the Reichstag and National Council will be asked to pass.

No country in history, it is declared, has ever been so exposed to commercial spying by rival agents from other countries. Ever since the armistice the country has been flooded with secret agents seeking not only to ferret out military, but still more important, commercial, technical and business secrets. They have often been successful owing to the cupidity of German lacking patriotism.

The law aimed at such commercial espionage and especially directed against Germans betraying their own secrets to foreigners such as in the case recently reported United States manufacturer. The law will provide prison penalties of an employee of a chemical works selling dye secrets to a statesman is?

"I shot one hand."

"Please sir, a statesman is a man who makes speeches."

"Well, hardly that. I sometimes make speeches, but I am not a statesman."

The little hand went up again.

"I know, sir, a statesman is a man who makes GOOD speeches."

Talking of school answers, a rather devastating one was given to a member of a certain education committee who thought it well to visit the schools occasionally and ask questions in the classes.

Once he spoke about Mr. Lloyd George, who he said, was a statesman, and then he finished up by asking:

"Now, can you tell me what a

Life Among Wild Deer

London Times.

To see red deer in the wild state one must journey to the far north or extreme southwest of Britain; but fortunately for the London nature lover the deer that are kept in the various London parks are very little different from their wild ancestors. Tamer they are, of course, but that is entirely an improvement, enabling one to watch them at much closer quarters than would be possible if they were truly wild.

The habits of the red deer, always well worth studying, are especially interesting from now till the end of November. For this is their season of love and combat and a magnificently antlered stag, pacing majestically in front of the numerous wives that his strength and valor have brought him, is one of nature's grandest sights. And the deep throaty bellow that he sends forth at intervals, not unlike a lion's roar, and the quick rattle and crash of antler against antler when his challenge has been accepted by another stag are thrilling sounds to hear.

HORSE NOTE.—Mr. Hammond Kelly has purchased at the Old Glory Auction, New York, a beautiful and fast Axworthy Standard Bred Stallion. This horse was purchased by Mr. George Watson of Tenach, New York, one of the largest exporters of trotting stock for export to the Old Country. Mr. Kelly thinking him to be a horse so well suited to the breeding interests of P. E. Island purchased him from Mr. Watson, and is bringing him to the island. He is four years old, of fine size and can step fast. Mr. Kelly is the largest importer of Standard Bred Stallions on the island and thinks perhaps that this is the best horse he has imported yet.

THE PRESENT AS THE CONSTRUCTIVE BREEDER'S OPPORTUNITY

(Experimental Farms Note.) With live stock farming as it always will, as the main contributing factor in the upkeep of the fertility of the land and of a permanent type of agriculture, there should never be a time when the live stock breeder need curtail his breeding opportunities, or lose sight of his goal—quality live stock for efficient production in periods of low prices. It is sometimes necessary for the farmer to neglect the future in order to take care of the present. It may also be necessary for a farmer who lacks capital to follow methods which he would change under other conditions. But, in general, it is advisable to follow a system of live stock farming that will ensure a steady and ever-increasing return.

Such returns can not be looked for when the breeder is handling stock of questionable productivity and working on an "in and out" system. Under such a system, he is usually "out" when he should be "in" and vice versa. On the other hand, the breeder who has high quality, productive stock and who holds on through thick and thin, reaps his reward when the law of supply and demand again raises prices to a remunerative level. It is not sufficient to stay "in." Every effort should be bent to increase the efficiency of the live stock. The breeder who did not get rid of his inefficient stock when prices for meat were at a high level missed a golden opportunity, but it is no reason why he should let them continue to eat their heads off now. It would, in many cases, be more economical to give them away than to keep them.

It would be a gloomy outlook indeed if the foregoing picture had not its sunny side, as well as its dark one. Practically every improver of live stock must be continually looking outside his own herds and flock for a stock when he is to continue effecting improvement. Therein lies the sunny side, for even the breeder of high-class stock has been hit, though not so hard as the breeder of mediocre stock, and he has had to meet the falling off in demand by a reduction of prices. As a consequence breeding stock of a quality to bring about rapid improvement in the average herd or flock can be obtained at reasonable prices. This is particularly true of sheep and swine and to a lesser degree of cattle and horses. Any farmer or breeder who feels or knows that he is handicapped under the present conditions by the lack of productivity or quality in his stock should take steps immediately to secure improved sires to put at the head of his herds and flocks. In doubtless there is no way in which improvement can be wrought more thoroughly and more economically than through the use of improved sires. If you have been collecting herds, replace them by pure bred sires, have given their progeny a decent chance and have not achieved any improvement, then the purebreds used could not have been of desirable type and quality. Discard them and, when procuring others, demand and get even the best or greater cost, sires from proven ancestry.

While the use of top-notch sires is one of the best methods of improvement where capital is limited, the introduction of a few choice females into the herd or flock, where capital will permit, will bring about the desired improvement much earlier. Let every person, then, who calls himself or herself a "breeder of live stock" than which there is no nobler art—bend every effort and grasp the present opportunity to put their herds and flocks into a state of efficiency that will enable them to produce economically throughout any kind of a seasonal or market situation. Bring back industry by being industrious and not accomplish anything, but not so with the efficiently industrious.
