IN MEMORIAM

MISS MARY HALL

The many friends of the late Mrs. Mary Hall, widow of the late Eugene Hall of Bradabane, P. E. I., were pained to hear of her death, which occurred in the Eastern Maine General Hospital, Bangor, Me., on the 20th day of July 1921, at the age of 53 years.

Her husband was a member of the Island this summer but her physician advised her going to the hospital and later, an operation was performed prolonging her life but it did not turn out as expected for two days after the operation the end came.

Her remains were brought to the Island by her daughters, Cora and Mrs. Guy Tucker and Mr. Tucker, and their friend, Mark Heckbert.

The late Mrs. Hall was one of those cheerful souls who looked on the bright side of things, bearing her troubles with calmness and submission to the Divine will.

She was one of the many Red Cross women of Bradabane who did so much for the comfort of the "Soldier Boys". She was an active member of the Women's Missionary Society of Bradabane, also a member in full communion in the Bradabane Presbyterian Church.

She leaves to mourn her loss two daughters in the west, Mrs. Alex. Arthur of Edmonton, Alta., and Mrs. James Mathews of Lanni, Sask., also three daughters in Brownville, viz. Mrs. Guy Tucker, Cora and Kathleen, two sisters, Mrs. Samuel Beth of Pisiquid, P. E. I., and a sister in Maine. The funeral was held on Friday, July 22, from train to Presbyterian Church at Bradabane, where a large congregation assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to one who was well beloved. The service in the church and at the grave were conducted by her former pastor, Rev. John Sterling, B. A.

The floral tributes were many and beautiful. The pall bearers were James and Kenneth Graham, Chas. Todd, Malcolm Buchanan, Chas. McKenzie and Hugh McLure. The remains were laid to rest beside her husband in Springtown.

Hints for the Motorist

The "Grease Churning" Loss

Lubrication is intended to conserve power not to waste it

MUCH OF THE POWER which the pistons receive from the burning charges is wasted, before it can act usefully at the rear wheels and these losses are being intensively studied in the interest of gasoline economy. Lubrication of all moving parts is designed to reduce these losses to a minimum, but it is being realized that all too often, prevailing lubrication methods entail serious power waste. The viscous, sticky lubricants of a semi-solid nature, frequently used in transmissions and rear axles, clinging to rapidly moving gears and constantly churned and beaten by them, absorb a great deal of power in their internal friction just as molasses candy requires power to "work" it. A transmission filled with one can imagine that considerable power would be required to turn the crank mixer and several thousand revolutions per minute—the speed of the transmission shafts. These "churning" losses increase very rapidly with speed and contribute materially to low fuel economy at high speeds. Wasted power manifests itself as heat and transmissions filled with thick adhesive greases become very warm from this cause. Cars making fuel economy runs always use thin oil in their gear boxes and rear ends, to reduce power forced lubrication, with thin oil, instead of being adapted to use heavy lubricant. The lesson from all this is that the transmission and rear end of the ordinary car should be supplied with a fluid lubricant as can be used without undue leakage and with sufficient film to quieten results. When a heavy grease filling is specifically recommended for a certain transmission by the manufacturer, it may be best to follow said instructions but when the use of a steam cylinder oil or even a lighter oil is permissible or recommended, a heavy grease filling is inadvisable on all accounts.

J. T. D. writes: I have to push the clutch pedal of my car hard against the floor boards, when changing speeds, or else the gears grind. What can I do to improve matters? Answer: It appears that your clutch discs have worn sufficiently so that the pedal, in its engaged position, is too far forward, the result being that, before it can be pushed forward far enough to fully separate the discs, it strikes the floor or comes very near doing so. The grinding is due to the driven discs and the clutch-shaft gears keeping in motion (spinning) when they should be at rest, because they are not fully out of contact with the driving gears. We think that your clutch pedal can be adjusted back further so that it will stand full release while yet the pedal has some clearance between it and the floor board.

Questions of general interest to the motorist will be answered by Mr. Clough in this column, space permitting. If an immediate answer is desired, enclose self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Mystery Port of Richborough

LONDON, Aug. 4.—Lord Northcliffe has contributed a preface to "The Romance of Richborough: a historical record of England's great mystery port," which has been written by Mr. Lewis Shandell and published by the Thanet Advertiser, Ramsgate.

"There is no spot in Britain," Lord Northcliffe states, "with a more interesting and varied history than Richborough. Here Julius Caesar is reputed to have landed, St. Augustine trod when he received audience before Ethelbert, the aborigines of Thanet and defeated the Picts and Scots, the great British navy had its nursing through the confederacy of the Cinque ports. It is the spot where the early Britons and the early Christians set a seal upon the nation's future. Through the ages Richborough has built up a fascinating story.

"In modern times it earned a position unique in our records for no place has undergone such remarkable vicissitudes as did this piece of marsh land during the war. The mystery and romance of Richborough fill one of the most entertaining pages of modern chronicles. There was no mystery greater than that surrounding this wonderful port, and nothing more romantic than the reclamation of this area of waste for uses that were of the greatest value to the nation.

"I am told that no volume has yet been published drawing aside the ancient and modern story, and this little book for the pen of my neighbor, Mr. Shandell, should appeal to a wide circle. It is well that the subject has inspired the writer."

A DIFFICULTY FOR THE CONFERENCE

That the Washington Conference is not going to be harmonious from the start is apparent from Japan's attitude. When the invitation to Tokyo was first received, the Japanese Government enquired of Secretary Hughes what was the agency. Accompanying this inquiry were intimations that Japan proposed to stand by the Lansing-Ishii agreement that recognized Japan's preferential claims on China; that she would not consent to the Shantung and Yap questions being discussed, because they were settled by the Paris Conference; and that the Conference should not become a court of enquiry and decision on political matters pertaining almost entirely to Japan.

The Tokio Government proposed to join the disarmament conference, but the one on Pacific problems was too full of possibilities for ready acceptance. The influence of London has, however, abated some of the stiffness of the Japanese attitude. Japan now is not so insistent respecting the exclusion of important Pacific matters from the scope of the conference, but she proposes, as a set-off, to bring up the matter of equality of treatment in immigration and land settlement. Australia bars the Japanese, and California land legislation is aimed at depriving Japanese of the right to own land. If the conference on Pacific problems is to be complete, it may include matters that are Japanese grievances, as well as others on which other nations have representations to make. The unyielding stand of Canadians and Americans to invasion by Japanese or other Orientals makes this phase of the conference difficult.

THE OUTLAW

The Story of a Girl Who Didn't Want to Marry

By ETHEL LLOYD PATT.

Chapter LVI

With Hugh Trotter's help and under Dr. Parker's direction, it was arranged that my mother should go to a hospital in the city. Dr. Parker told me that once the operation was decided upon it was always better for the patient to go through with it without delay. Naturally, the thought of it from day to day, even to the bravest person was apt to bring on a case of nerves. Although, I must say, it would have taken a very acute observer to find any fear or worry about herself in my mother's attitude. Her gratitude to me for undertaking to pay for the operation was almost pitiful.

It was a fairly trying time for me. As I had grown older and more understanding, I had come to care more and more for my mother. Perhaps because I realized more fully her bravery, if the money was to be earned to give her the care she should have, I naturally would have to continue working at the studio all day.

This left my younger brothers and sisters to their own devices. That was not so bad since they were in school and fairly well able to care for themselves with the exception of Jane. Jane would have to be looked after by the maid of all work while I was away during the day.

Certainly this was enough reason for a fairly young girl to be sick, he said. "And you hear nothing but their pains and aches for the rest of your life! All these doctors want is your money. If a woman once goes to the doctor he'll tell her there's something the matter with her, whether there is or not. Why shouldn't he? Ain't that the way they earn their living? Don't talk to me! I won't have none of it in my household! Your mother has got along all right so far, and I won't have this nonsense put in her head now!"

"Father," I said, "we won't argue the matter. Mother is ill. I've had the diagnosis of a good surgeon. She's going to be operated on to relieve her of this pain. That's there is to it."

"Well, she's not," declared my father. "Am I master in my own house or am I not?"

I refused to discuss the matter any further with him. A few days later, after father had gone to work, I took mother to the hospital. She was not to be operated on until forty-eight hours later. Father came home very much under the influence of liquor that night and didn't even ask for her. So for the moment a scene with him was avoided.

However, I must say I worried. I didn't see just how I was to get through the next two weeks. This came out the first night I was left alone with the children. Heaps helped give them their dinner and kept them good natured afterwards with his humor and his stories. He paid very little attention to me personally. And my mind was too distracted with worry over my own affairs. But I couldn't help noticing and being grateful to Hugh for his patience and his thoughtfulness. After all there was no reason why he should do so much for me. I put the thought into my mind.

"Nell," said Hugh, "don't you make any mistake about it. I like you first rate, and I'd do a lot for you, but believe me, I'd do a heap more for your mother. She's a brick. If I come out here every night, don't you put any feathers in your cap. I'd do as much and more, any day, to set your mother's mind at rest about the children. She's a good scout. That's what she is!"

And to contrast with this way Mr. Dayton's advice and manner towards me.

"My poor child," he sighed, "I wish I could take you out of all this. You know I would if I could. You're made for sunshine. You'll break down under the worry of this. I wish you didn't have to go through with it."

I repeated something of this conversation to Hugh, half laughing and half to see what he would say.

"Made for sunshine!" he snorted. "Well, then, you're made of darn poor ware, my dear. Because you're not a life in the world that the girl who's got an umbrella meant that to be a compliment. But I take it that he means he wouldn't turn to you if he was in any trouble. If you were 'made for sunshine,' you'd probably wilt on a good hot day."

"Fiddle-de-dee!" said Hugh. "Take that stuff at its face value. If you don't like it, lap it up—that's all I've got to say, but in my humble opinion when a girl's in a pickle, the thing to do is to lend a hand and pull her out if you can; not tell her how sweet she looks in her distress."

"But kind words are nice, too," I said.

"Sure!" agreed Hugh heartily. "The only trouble with them is you can't eat them." And then in a matter of fact tone: "You'd better go upstairs and see what the matter with Jane; she's yelling

Latest Thing In Neat Eye Surgery At Toronto

TORONTO, Aug. 4.—Toronto doctors witnessed the latest thing in neat eye surgery this morning when a visitor removed ten cataracts in about one hour at Grace Hospital. The visitor is Lieut.-Col. Dr. Henry Smith, of Amritsar, India, who is touring the North American Continent performing operations gratis for the instruction of the medical profession. Dr. Smith has removed over 50,000 cataracts and has become so expert that he does a complete job in about five minutes and no second operation is necessary.

CHARLIE WHITE WILL GET CHANCE TO MEET DUNDEE IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—Charley White, Chicago lightweight, has been matched to meet Johnny Dundee in a 10-round decision bout at the boxing Drome on the night of August 10. This will be White's first appearance in New York in nearly seven years.

The Chicago boxer's important bout was against Benny Leonard last year at Benton Harbor, Mich. It was in this bout that White knocked Leonard through the ropes. It was the closest call that the champion had ever since winning the title.

Since then White has been clapping for a return engagement and in Dundee he may find a stepping stone to another bout with the title holder. White has agreed to make 135 pounds at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the day of the Dundee bout.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

Lord Northcliffe has now the unique distinction of having been publicly repudiated in the British House of Commons by His Majesty the King and denounced by the Prime Minister of Britain for "criminal malignity." The humor lies in the explanation. An interview given by the companion editor was ascribed in the noble lord's own newspaper to Lord Northcliffe himself. Somebody blundered, in the cables or in the noble lord's newspaper office, just as they have blundered by accident or design in the noble lord's newspapers many times before. But on this occasion it is the noble lord himself who gets hurt. Probably Lord Northcliffe will be able to wreak vengeance on the perpetrator of the inhuman joke where other victims would have had to be content with exuding perspiration in quantities such as those we are told by a faithful Boswell Lord Northcliffe exuded in Washington on Friday.

The aforesaid Boswell tells by wire that Lord Northcliffe was so hot in Washington that he had to change his clothes three times on Friday, not counting dressing for dinner, and that one palm beach suit was completely ruined!

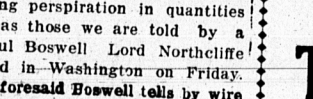

The New York Times declares that the interview with the companion editor was done by a reliable reporter who believes that he reported accurately what the companion editor said, and the companion editor's defence is that the interview "contains matter which should not have been published."

her head off. When I came in tonight she was licking a brush one of the painters left. I took it away from her, because I had a hunch it might not agree with her."

KNOX CHURCH HEARS A COLORED MINISTER

TORONTO, Aug. 3.—Knox Presbyterian church was crowded to the doors at both services Sunday, the attraction being a colored preacher, Rev. Dr. Joseph J. Hill, of Hot Springs, Ark., who has been engaged to relieve the regular pastor during the holiday season.

Dr. Hill made it clear that he was proud of his color. He described the human race as a great human bouquet in which were black, yellow, brown, red, and white.

"We blacks are the background to show up the white," he said. Dr. Hill criticized card-playing, theatre-going and dancing among church members, and also their spiritless prayers.

"We on the American continent," he said, "say our prayers, but we have ceased to pray."

As a rule the girl who is able to weep on the slightest occasion imagines she was cut out for an emotional actress.

Nothing pleases a pretty woman more than to be seen on the street with another woman who isn't pretty.
