HER DAUGHTER WAS SAVED FROM OPERATION

Mrs. Wells of Petersburg Tells How.

Petersburg, Va.—"For two years my daughter suffered from a weakness and pains in her right side; at times she was so bad she could not do any work. For two years she was attended by the best physicians here, and both agreed that she would have to be operated on. I suggested Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and at first she refused to take it, but finally consented. From the very beginning it helped her, and now she is entirely well, and telling everybody how much good it has done her.—Mrs. W. D. WELLS, 228 North Adams Street, Petersburg, Va. If every girl who suffers as Miss Wells did, or from irregularities, painful periods, backache, headache, dragging down pains, inflammation or ulceration would only give this famous root and herb remedy a trial they would soon find relief from such suffering. For special advice women are asked to write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of forty years experience is at your service.

China and Japan

WHAT does Japan want in China? Japan says she has only the most laudable desire to help a stumbling sister. China says Japan is trying to gobble her up, and opinion on this continent seems to sustain the Chinese view. The Ottawa Citizen states the position concisely as follows: "The entrance to North China is through the Gulf of Chihli, which, in turn, is nearly closed by two pincers in the shape of peninsulas. The possession of these pincers means the possession of North China. As a result of the Japanese-Russian war the former now hold Port Arthur and Dalny on the northern arm of the pincers, and by the taking of Kiaochow on the southern arm, virtually control all the northern part of the vast empire, and would at any time be in position to transport troops into the heart of the country." Meanwhile, China has appealed to the Peace Conference, and the Chicago Tribune says: "China has got Japan's hand away from her mouth long enough to utter at least one shrill call for help to the Peace Conference and to the United States, challenging our self-advertised championship of oppressed nationalities." China's appeal to the Peace Conference was in the nature of a threat to publish the secret treaties Japan forced her to enter into in May, 1915. Japan was immediately reported to have retorted with a threat of war, if the treaties were published, and this report was as quickly denied. But the Philadelphia Record observes: "Japan is coercing China to deny that it is correct. The process cannot be concealed, and the more secrecy is maintained the more sinister the Japanese policy will be supposed to be. The wiser thing would be for Japan to open the door and disclose in full its relations with China. It is not likely that Europe and America will allow Japan to establish itself as the overlord of China, and the secrecy is a suspicious circumstance that must of itself arouse distrust of Japan. If a few millions of Poles and Slavs are to be endowed with power to control their own destinies, it is not likely that Europe and America will allow Japan to subject 400,000,000 Chinese to its own will."

The New Orleans Times-Picayune and the Portland Oregonian both think the Peace Conference will interfere to block Japanese designs. The Oregonian called the Japanese imbroglio the "first job for the league," and said further: "The conduct of Japan toward China and the plea of the latter country to the Peace Conference suggest that one of the first duties of the five great powers may be to exert the authority of the League of Nations against one of themselves while the league is still in process of incubation. Japan shows contempt for several of the fourteen points. It prefers secret treaties to open covenants. It disregards self-determination of nations by attempting to hold the piece of China which it took from Germany. It tries to hold Shaanang in defiance of its promise when it declared war on Germany to return it to China. Its claim is based on conquest, not on a mandate from the League of Nations."

The Chinese delegates to the Peace Conference charged that while their ship was lying in the harbor of Yokohama their baggage was rifled and their copies of the secret treaties that they were taking to Paris were stolen. This feature of the affair comes in for a good deal of attention. The Memphis Commercial Appeal writes: "Speaking of card playing and diplomacy—for they have many psychological similarities—the heathen Chinese will have to surrender his laurels to his slant-eyed Japanese brother. "The Chinese delegates to the Peace Conference left home with their grips filled with copies of malevolent secret treaties showing how the Flowery Kingdom had conspired against the land of Confucius. On their way to Paris they passed through Japan. When they arrived at Versailles they opened their baggage, to find that all of the telltale secret documents had been extracted, and subsequent proceedings interested them no more."

"The Japanese idea is that opportunity is now ripe for eucherizing China out of all her iron mines, railroads and other productive assets worth having. It seems to be a plain case of the big bully and the little boy, and it may be readily believed that the sympathies of the Allied powers are with China."

GERMANY AND JAPAN.

Viscount Kato Recalls Some of His Experiences. Viscount Kato, the veteran Japanese diplomatist, who was Foreign Minister when war broke out, has made some interesting disclosures of German treachery and duplicity at a formal public dinner, attended by several influential Japanese statesmen. Referring to the triple interference at the end of the China-Japan war, which he had no doubt was of German origin, Viscount Kato said that time he was Ambassador in London, and he had a nasty one across his scalp. The bullet that made him was examining with much interest. "What's de use, anyway?" he asked a bit proudly, "of a cullid man wearin' a steel hat like dat? Yere's where de bullet went in, an' yere's where it came out after it bounced off my head."

Solid Oil for Fuel.

Oil can be made permanently solid with comparative ease, says the Mexican Review. There are numerous processes—some patented, others supposed to be secret—for accomplishing this result; and the reason they are not employed is that as a rule it is more convenient to have oil in its liquid state. Especially is this so to-day, when oil is many times more valuable than it was seven or eight years ago, when most of these processes were talked of. By the heating of the oil and the admixture of a substance well known and very common, as well as cheap, the oil was quickly converted into a substance which when cold took on a solid form. In order that this form should be permanent it was necessary to add, during the latter part of the mixing, a small quantity of another well known and cheap article, known as "binder." If this was properly done, the oil, on cooling, assumed the form of a permanent solid; it could be cut into bricks, blocks or slabs, and when burned in a furnace did not melt, but retained its solid form until consumed. All varieties of crude oil, and most products, could be so treated. Lamp oil that had undergone this process, and had been solidified, could be cut up afterwards into small slices that were exceedingly handy for lighting fires, boiling a kettle, and other operations for which only a limited amount of flame and heat was required. The large block of solid crude oil could be used with advantage as locomotive or other furnace fuel; and a test made on a British express train was entirely satisfactory, the journey being accomplished on this fuel to schedule time with the greatest ease.

That Tin Hat. A wounded negro soldier had succeeded in bringing his tin hat with him to the base hospital. Among other wounds, he had a nasty one across his scalp. The bullet that made him was examining with much interest. "What's de use, anyway?" he asked a bit proudly, "of a cullid man wearin' a steel hat like dat? Yere's where de bullet went in, an' yere's where it came out after it bounced off my head."

Finding Honey. Quantities of honey are found in the African forests by the natives in hollow trees. The honey is generally at the summit of the tree, and the men knock down the tree, and smoke the bees out of their lodging with burning grass. The honey is then quickly collected and taken to camp.
