WILD HORSES
By Henry Herbert Knibbs

"Perhaps, I advised him to ride south, and keep going," declared Baker.

"Knowing we was on our way here? Well, Baker, that ain't what I call friendly to Uncle Sam. There's a deputy United States marshal on the job, right now. 'Course he ain't after any reward money." There was a pause, which Johnny interpreted as a gentle insinuation that the posse was after the money as well as the man. Then the voice in the office continued: "But you had a right to tell young Trent to vamoose—that. You must have figured he done the job, or you wouldn't have advised him to pull his freight."

"I didn't want to see him get into trouble, whether he did the job or not," declared Baker. "You see, he'll be a hard man to handle if he's cornered. Now, question for question: What evidence have you that Johnny Trent held up this Solano stage?"

"Why, Old Henry says he recognized his voice. Then, it seems that this man Trent and that young woman from Chicago knew each other pretty well. It was a queer deal—his making away with the woman and not making any play to rob the mail."

"Queer enough. And when it comes to a show-down, I wonder if the Government or the county has a case against him. As I understand it, somebody stopped the stage between here and Concho, told Old Henry to climb down, and along with Miss Percival, and then ordered Old Henry to get back on the stage again. Something frightened the team and they started to run, with Old Henry in the rig and the young woman standing beside the road. When Henry and the Concho constable went back to look for Miss Percival she had disappeared. The inference is that she was kidnapped by the bandit. But here seems to be no evidence that his intention was to rob the mail, or interfere with it in any way, or rob either the driver or the passenger. Besides, I understand from Old Henry that the highwayman did not molest him, or even lay a finger on him or the contents of the stage. Technically, Miss Percival was a passenger on the Solano stage. The rescue derived from passengers reverts to me as the owner of the stage line. The passenger business incidental to carrying the mail. As owner of the stage line I am personally responsible for the safety of passengers, and for the safe delivery of the mail. Even suppose you did arrest Johnny Trent, it would be a difficult matter to prove that he held up the stage, and you could hardly prove that he robbed the mail or the passengers. I am trying to view the matter impersonally. By the way, did you pick up any tracks down around Concho?"

"That's the worst of it," declared Johnny Trent. "He said that said three horses was used in the hold-up, and we trailed 'em clean to the flats south of Concho. The storm that hit us just after we left Antelope washed out the tracks on the flats. Never did pick 'em up again."

"Then you think that the highwayman rode from Concho?"

"Started south. Maybe swung off east or west, later."

"Three horses?"

"Yes."

"Then," queried Baker, "which one of the three held up the stage? Old Henry says one man did, and he thinks he recognized Johnny Trent's voice."

"Well," came the voice of the chief deputy, "somebody did. Just what does this young Trent look like, anyhow?"

Johnny, squatting beneath the window, felt considerable interest in the reply. Would Baker describe the man?

"Yes, it's me."

"All right," came Baker's voice. Footsteps sounded on the board floor as the storekeeper strode across the office. The spring lock clicked.

"Something mighty important," declared Old Henry as Baker opened the door. Old Henry's unconventional attire substantiated the statement. He stepped into the room, blinking in the strong light.

"It's all right," said Baker as Old Henry stared round at the posse. "Glad you came over. The boys here may want to ask you a few questions about—"

"Johnny Trent," said Johnny as

The next day when the queen came to see how much the girl had done she was very much surprised to find the flax untouched. "Oh, queen," cried the poor girl, thoroughly frightened. "I was so sad at being parted from my mother that I could do nothing but weep."

The queen was touched by her tearful face. "You have a tender heart," she said. "But you must be a good girl tomorrow. When I come again I shall expect to find a whole roomful done."

Then the queen went away and the girl began to weep once more, for she knew she could never, never spin all that flax.

AUCTION SALE
AT MILTON

I am instructed by Geo. F. MacNeill of Milton, to sell by Public Auction on April 29th, 1925, at one o'clock p. m., his farm containing 70 acres of land, 60 acres clear, also the following Stock, Crops and Implements.

STOCK—One mare 10 years old "Commodore" in foal to Landisburg, due July 8th. One horse rising 3 years old, by Dingola, dam Commodore. 1 cow 4 years old, Ayshire Grade, due to freshen May 14th. 1 cow 8 years old, due to freshen May 16th. 1 cow, 8 years old, due to freshen May 21st. 1 heifer 2 years old, due to freshen November 8th. 1 heifer 2 years old, due to freshen December 8th. 1 heifer 1 1/2 years old, Gurnsey Grade. 1 heifer 1 year old, Gurnsey Grade. 1 brood sow with litter. 1 brood sow due to farrow July 2nd. 1 brood sow due to farrow July 5th. 1 pure bred registered Yorkshire boar. 1 year old, "bacon" type. 40 young hens, mostly Plymouth Rocks, 2 pure bred Plymouth Rock Roosters 1 year old. . . .

cribe him fairly—and his horse? Or would he try to mislead the posse with a false description. Baker's answer was deliberate and accurate.

"Why," said the deputy, "we met a quiet-spoken young hombra on the way over, that fills your description to the huzz. And he was riding a little cow-horse with a white star in his forehead, and one white foot. Now if that was young Trent—"

"Might have been," said Baker. "He's not the kind to cut and run just because of a little dust. He's young, but don't you make any mistake about his being full-grown. I'd hate to see any of you boys get hurt."

"I'll take a chance—for five thousand," declared a voice. "A splendid example of the coolness and courage which marked the fast-disappearing type, the old frontiersman, who although in the sea and yellow, and enfeebled by weight of years and a lifelong battle with the elements, still clung to the noble traditions of the historic past. It sounded good to Old Henry, although he disliked the word "yellow" and the only "sers" he knew about was the "sers" in the mechanism of a six shooter.

"I want you to come over to Baker's with me," said Johnny, and because Old Henry seemed so utterly amazed at this mild remark, Johnny punctuated the sentence with the muzzle of his gun. "And don't yip, or I'll just naturally drill you," continued Johnny. "Never mind your boots. Don't worry about your feet. It's your head you want to think about. Come on!"

Old Henry stammered and stuttered and blbed internally, but as on a similar occasion, he recognized a business man when he heard his voice.

Johnny escorted Old Henry across the street and deviously round to the back of Baker's store. Old Henry protested that the girl hurt his feet—but he kept on going. "And now you can step up and knock, and Baker will ask you what you want. Tell him you have something important to unload, and he'll let you in. I'll be right behind you. I'll be right behind you. I'll be right behind you."

Old Henry groaned. He was paying a heavy price for "The Antelope News" eulogy. Wrath and helplessness made him groan with fear. He proved an expert pupil under the tuition of that preeminent instructor Mr. Colt. He rapped on the back door. "I want to see you a minute, Mr. Baker," he quavered.

"Yes, it's me."

"All right," came Baker's voice. Footsteps sounded on the board floor as the storekeeper strode across the office. The spring lock clicked.

"Something mighty important," declared Old Henry as Baker opened the door. Old Henry's unconventional attire substantiated the statement. He stepped into the room, blinking in the strong light.

"It's all right," said Baker as Old Henry stared round at the posse. "Glad you came over. The boys here may want to ask you a few questions about—"

The Dennistoun Case
The Most Famous Matrimonial Case Since Charles II's Time.

The witness agreed that at that time he knew that Mrs. Dennistoun was expecting her late husband to marry Lady Carnarvon. He repeated his former evidence that at the end of the interview he asked when the marriage was going to take place, as he wished that any proceedings might be completed before it took place, and Mr. Fryer said that he would not satisfy his curiosity.

Sir Edward Marshall-Hall—Did you say that you had heard that the marriage might be in June? That is a lie. I had never heard of such a thing.

His Lordship—I think that it is better to say that it is inaccurate. Sir George Lewis—It is an invention. It is a question whether I am to be believed or whether he is.

"An Absolute Invention."

Further questioned about the interview, the witness said—I must say again that it is an absolute invention. I have never heard such an invented conversation in a whole course of my career. There is not a word of truth in it from beginning to end.

Sir Edward Marshall-Hall—You have sworn that you told Mr. Fryer of this alleged promise by Colonel Dennistoun to support his wife.

I put it to you that you never said anything of the kind. That was the whole object of the interview. I knew that the settlements had been varied.

You notice that, even in your version, you do not say that the arrangement was made in consideration of her renouncing her claim to alimony—I have not suggested that.

Counsel read the letter of December 21, 1923, which he suggested was a "most improper" letter. In it Mrs. Dennistoun said that her husband had "completely deceived her in every way."

"With regard to Almina (Lady Carnarvon)," she continued, "my friend and I valued her friendship intensely. Through you I lost it when you became her lover."

Sir Edward Marshall-Hall—Do you see any concealed suggestion in those words?—No.

You say that you told Mr. Fryer at the interview of October 2 that there was no use in discussing the question of what Colonel Dennistoun was prepared to do with regard to the settlement fund because it had already been done and executed by deed—I told him that there was no need for any further document to be executed to release Mrs. Dennistoun's interest under her marriage settlement fund because it had been done two years previously.

On December 17, 1923, Mr. Fryer wrote a letter in which he said that he had not the slightest idea what Mrs. Dennistoun was talking about, and added, "I told Sir George Lewis at our interview that Colonel Dennistoun was quite prepared to do all in his power to release Mrs. Dennistoun's marriage settlement fund?"—Then he had a very funny muddle in his mind.

On December 31 you wrote that Colonel Dennistoun had promised to support Mrs. Dennistoun, "as she wrote in her letter" not "as I told you at our interview." Why did you not say that at the interview of October 2?—One cannot repeat everything that happens at an interview. You told me that the only real reason why you went to Mr. Fryer was to tell him of the arrangement between Colonel and Mrs. Dennistoun—I went to find out what he was prepared to do.

That might be with or without an agreement?—It might. "According to you," added the witness, "my letter ought to have been about 50 pages long."

"Don Not be Childish"

Sir Edward Marshall-Hall—Do not be childish. Forgive me, but do not be childish.

Sir George Lewis—No lawyer is expected to write about every single point which may arise in a case when it comes into Court. Business could not be conducted on those lines.

Counsel asked the witness why the plaintiff should have put in one of her letters to the defendant in the phrase, "Through you I lost it (Lady Carnarvon's affection) when you became her lover?"

Sir George Lewis—Before people are married they generally are lovers. (Laughter.)

Sir Edward Marshall-Hall requested the witness to look at the pleadings and then asked: The writ in this action was issued on January 28. Was it endorsed by you or Mr. St. John Field, your junior counsel?—By Mr. Field.

The plaintiff's claim is for money lent and for specific performance of a contract to make provision for the plaintiff during her natural life?—Yes.

In the statement of claim there is a claim for £1,350 under various heads and then there comes this claim, that in consideration of her refraining from claiming alimony in France or England the defendant would, as soon as he was in a position to do so, make this provision for the plaintiff?—Yes.

There is the claim for specific performance of the contract or damages for the breach of it?—There is.

The statement of claim is dated February 22, and in it there is a paragraph alleging the defendant's marriage with Almina Countess of Carnarvon?—Yes.

The Court struck out that reference to Lady Carnarvon?—We consented to its being struck out, but it was to be fought out. Lady Carnarvon's name had to come into the case.

Did you say you consented?—Mr. St. John Field—I did.

Sir Edward Marshall-Hall—On May 7 you joined issue?

The witness.—It is a waste of time to say that.

Counsel.—And the particulars of defence were ordered on May 21?—We were asked to certain particulars, and we wrote back in return and said, "these are the particulars."

I want to go to May 27, 1924; that is the date on which Mrs. Dennistoun swore her affidavit of discovery. I want you thoroughly to appreciate the date. On May 27 the issue was perfectly clear. There was a claim for money and for specific performance of a contract, and there was a defence put on record which denied the loan and absolutely denied the agreement. That was the sole issue between us then?—Yes.

And on May 27 the affidavit was sworn by Mrs. Dennistoun that she had in her possession or power the documents relating to the matters in this action set forth in the schedule?—Yes.

That means that you have to disclose documents relative to the case?—It does.

Did you see the documents that

What is the Use of Living?

What is the use of living when a woman gets up in the morning as tired as when she went to bed at night with headache, backache, dragging-down pain, nervous, irritable and despondent? These are all symptoms of ailments peculiar to her sex which makes life a burden. Every woman in this condition should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a good old-fashioned remedy made from roots and herbs. It contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and for 80 years has been restoring women to health and strength and the joys of living.
