

Was So Nervous The Least Noise Made Her Jump

Mrs. W. H. Yates, Ashern, Man., writes:—"I was bothered very much with my heart and nerves, and the least noise would make me jump and almost stop my heart beating."

When I had taken the one box I felt quite a lot better and by the time I had taken three boxes I got relief.

hygienic problem now solved a new and different way—true protection. Dispose of it as easily as tissue

By ELLEN J. BUCKLAND Registered Nurse

THE old-time "sanitary pad" is fast becoming a rarity. Millions are discarding it as a needless hazard.

"KOTEX," a new and remarkable way, is now used by 8 in 10 better class women.

Discards as easily as tissue. No laundry. No embarrassment. It's five times as absorbent as ordinary cotton pads!

It deodorizes, too. And thus stops all danger of offending. You ask for it at any drug or department store, without hesitancy, simply by saying "KOTEX."

Do as millions are doing. End old, insecure ways. Enjoy life every day. Be sure you get the genuine. Only Kotex itself is "like" Kotex.

PARADISE

By COSMO HAMILTON Author of "Scandal" and the "Blindness of Virtue."

Three times the hooter. Three times and three and three the echoes. The native hauled at the oars. The Isis came to life.

Christie waved her hand. "Give my love to Pantan Street—" "And good old Piccadilly Circus"

"Trafalgar Square—" "And the Metropole." "All right all right."

Lady George could hardly see the old worn boat, the glistening native, her dear boy Tony and the girl he had taken from Teddy Sherwood at the ball before the war.

"Don't forget your promise," cried out Pollock. Christie kissed her hand and wrinkled up her nose. If that cynic were right about Lord Stirling, and the chart turned out to be a ghastly joke, she could nurse poor old Tony through an illness of the spirit as she had nursed him through his physical wreck, and sing their way back to Pantan Street.

As the Isis turned round slowly, Tony raised his hat and flashed the well-known winning smile.

"Now," he said to McCoustie, whose reg-fringed eyes had followed the chart to a spot in the heart of the village, "before you begin to jig, you must say these things to my people."

"Ave." With Christie at his side, as she always was, and an expression of the deepest emotion in his usually smiling eyes, Tony looked slowly round at the flower-crowned natives who, in all the glory of their ancient finery, had formed an ecstatic ring. To the throbbing of the drum logs, the hollow boom of the tom-toms, the hisping of the wind in the palm leaves, the perpetual roll of the sea, they were reeling and surging in the dance passion, singing their guttural chant.

Raising his hands for silence, when all sound died and every movement ceased, Tony turned again to McCoustie. "Tell them that from this moment, the torture which is closed—Tell them that the day of unkindness will never come again—Tell them that the young white Chief is here to dedicate his life to their well-being with sympathy for their needs. Tell them that under my kingship they shall be treated with brotherhood and understanding—his voice broke—"and ask for their faith in me."

And McCoustie told them in their language and a mighty shout rang out.

"Now dig." And as McCoustie stabbed the earth with the spade, Christie, the courageous Christie, trembled like a leaf. "Oh, God, dear God," she cried in her soul, "don't—don't let this be a cruel joke. Oh, don't, for Tony's sake, who has come through all these years to do his job."

The spade struck something with a metallic click. The earth was scattered, and in the shallow lay a small and rusty box. "Stirling" had been painted on it, and some of the letters had been washed away. It was wired, there being no lock. And when this was unrolled, there, neatly, were the deeds of Paradise.

And as Tony waved them above his head Christie gave thanks in prayer, the air filled once more with the noise of drum-log and tom-tom. The chant commenced again, and in all the colours of rainbow, coral, bird and fish, the rejoicing natives whirled and twisted in the dance passion. This was their day of days.

"And I'll do my darndest to live up to that creed," said Tony, "if you'll help me, Chris."

Passing the site chosen mutually for their palace, they returned to the house of Bill Quex. McCoustie had gone to the jetty. They had the place to themselves.

"There's one other thing," said Tony, with something warm in his eyes. "There's your Bible in the bedroom, Chris. Do you mind bringing it here?"

"Yes," she said wondering, "Of course I will if you want it."

She came back with it quickly. What was he going to do? She had rarely seen him with a book and never with Sissie's Bible.

"I don't know whether a rather strange thing had ever occurred to you, duckie. But under these circumstances, you and I have got to be married again."

"Married again?" "Of course. The old one was a morganatic affair, d'you see? However, we can make that right in the shake of a jiffy. Darling, put your hand on the Book."

And she did so, looking up. How blue her eyes were, how gold her hair and head.

All along the high blue sky like a waving feather was the smoke of the out-of-sight Isis, and there, all round them, the chanting and the tom-tom and the roar of the sea.

"Do you take King Tony to be your lawful husband?" he asked. "I should think I do," she said. "Do I take Queen Christie to be my wedded wife? You bet your life," he said.

And he placed the Book to her lips and to his lips and held out his good arm. And she pressed close with her chin no higher than his top-most waistcoat button, and adored. "Of course he was a blooming gent! A King, a Chief, a Wing Commander, a loyal and faithful husband, a sportsman and a lover."

"Oh, Chris, my wonderful Chris. What can I do for you?" "You've done it for me," she said, wrinkling her nose. "But I don't think I shall grumble if you do it all again."

THE END.

CLEAR SPRING

On November 9th, ten of the resident women of Clear Spring met in the school room about 7:30 p. m. for the purpose of organizing a Women's Institute in the district.

The following officers were elected:— President, Mrs. John A. MacDonald, Vice President, Mrs. Chester MacDonald, Secretary, Miss Minnie MacAdam, Mrs. Wilfred MacDonald, Directors, Mrs. James MacLennan, Mrs. Fabian Deagle, Auditors, Miss Agnes MacLennan, Miss Margaret Gillis.

The Institute was named the "The Jolly Club." The third Tuesday in every month was appointed as the night for regular meetings, which are to open at 7:30 p. m. in winter and 8:00 in summer.

The secretary-elect was asked to write the supervisor and have her come out.

Provisions were made for the accommodation and entertainment of same while in the district. Anticipating her arrival in that near future no further business was undertaken and the meeting was adjourned.

On Nov. 19th, a special meeting was held. Word was previously received that the supervisor would be here on December 4th. Hence roll call was answered with "ways and means of raising money," and it was planned to have a raffle and dance within the two weeks following.

The date was set for Nov. 22nd and to entertain their members. Supper being prepared and served by the members elect, and Fortune favoured with a beautiful night and a large attendance. The sum of $32.10 was realized. The surplus of which is to be spent on school-improvements. Up until the latter part of January, for business reasons, the supervisor has been unable to be present, and the regular meeting shall be on January 18th.

On January 18th the "Jolly Club" met in the school-house. Roll call was answered by "What entertainment will be suitable to increase the funds." Nine members and five visitors were present. After some discussion it was moved by Margaret Gillis that a weighing party be held on St. Valentine's Day Feb. 14th at the home of Mrs. James MacLennan. One of the co-operative visitors agreed to furnish a set of scales. The vice-president was appointed to take charge of the scales, one of the directors to check the weights while the president handles the cash. Supper shall be served during the dance by all the members. Mention was made that all fees be paid at the next regular meeting, which shall be held at the home of Mrs. Fabian Deagle, where roll call is to be answered by "A Story."

The meeting was closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

DOES WEAKNESS DETRACT FROM YOUR GOOD LOOKS?

Photo by Micklethwaite Mrs. Thomas Chapman of 3 Somerset Place, Toronto, Ont., whose picture appears here, said "Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription" was very helpful to me and I know it to be the very best medicine a woman can take when nervous and run down. I had a breakdown—my nerves were so upset I could not sleep. I also suffered from nervous indigestion, but after taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription I did not suffer with indigestion and I could get a natural night's rest, which I could not do before. No woman can appreciate what a wonderful medicine the "Favorite Prescription" is until she gives it a trial.

John Smith and His Car

By FREDERICK C. RUSSELL. John Smith is a character whom every motorist should welcome. He is not selfish, rather he is a motoring martyr, a chap willing and glad to have exploited, in an interesting way, his experiences for the benefit of the other twenty million or more members of the motor clan.

ADJUSTING THE VALVES "Your motor's making an awful lot of unnecessary noise," I reminded Smith one morning recently when he was starting off.

"I know," he admitted, "but what can I do about it? Between you and me I think 'e engine's going West."

"Nonsense!" I retorted. "Adjust your valve tappets and you will think you've got a new car. Of course your motor is the valve-in-the-head type—and not the most perfected kind at that—so you are bound to have a little more clicking. When the valves are in the side, as with an L-head motor, the action is more direct and therefore quieter as a rule. But if I should let you stem clearances increase to more than the thickness of a visiting card my engine would begin to sound like yours."

Whereupon Smith decided to look over his valves that evening. But when I returned to the garage later to see how things were going he was a most distressed mechanic.

The engine was running first on four and then on five cylinders, but never on the full six.

"Let me see how you do this work," I said. "Select a valve which you think needs attention and take up the unnecessary clearance."

Smith looked over the situation and selected the intake valve of cylinder No. 6. The action was so loose that you could raise or lower the push rod noticeably. Holding the adjusting nut of the push rod with one wrench he loosened the locking nut. By merely turning up the adjusting nut, he eliminated the clearance. Then by turning up the locking nut until it fitted lightly against the other he made the adjustment permanent.

In working on an L-head motor with valves in the side, by the way the same procedure is followed, except that it is usually necessary to hold the push rod with a third wrench while the adjustment is being made.

When Smith had finished performing I asked: "Is that the way you have been adjusting all the valve tappets? Because, if you have it no wonder to me that your motor is running all wrong. You haven't left any clearance at all between the end of the valve stem and the tip of the rocker arm. Can't you see that when the engine heats and these parts begin to expand, the valve is going to be held partly open all the time, and that it will leak compression and cause a skip in the particular cylinder?"

"That may be so," Smith argued. "But I found three of these valves just as tightly adjusted before I had done a thing to the motor. Yet the engine ran perfectly before, except for the noise."

"Of course they were tight," I admitted. "The valves you speak of were probably half open during the intake or exhaust strokes of their respective pistons. Do you realize that you are adjusting each tappet without first seeing that the piston of its corresponding cylinder is at upper dead center?"

"What difference does that make?" "Just the difference between a motor that goes and one that doesn't!" I retorted. "When a piston is at upper dead center the top of its stroke, in other words—both intake and exhaust valves for its cylinder must be closed, and there must also be a slight clearance between the ends of the valve stems and the ends of the rocker arms. This is the position of the piston when compression is at its high peak and when the compressed mixture in the cylinder is beginning to fire and expand. The valves have got to be closed tight at this point or the mixture in the cylinder doesn't do its part."

"I can tell when the pistons are in the proper position," he asked. "I haven't got an X-ray handy."

"There are several ways," I explained. "To be absolutely accurate you can follow the markings on the flywheel. A simpler way is to open the petcocks and having someone crank the motor slowly, or by pulling the flywheel around with one hand, feel with your thumb when the compression is greatest. The piston of the cylinder you're working on will then be at the top point. With a valve-in-the-head motor you can usually see the top of the piston or at least feel it, by removing the spark plug."

So with this suggestion and what help I could give him Smith tuned up the motor in fine shape and in half the time he had spent putting it out of commission. Then we got in and tried her out.

"Runs fine, doesn't it?" Smith commented. "Quieter than ever before—and so smooth. But why doesn't it pick up quicker? It's a little dead on hills."

"That's because of the age—old fact that you can't have everything," I explained. "If you want a little pep, and vice versa, I usually give it up preferring quietness when I'm driving in the city and by giving the tappets a little more clearance when I'm on a tour and want pep for hill climbing."

8 doctors out of every 10 advised the Nujol type of treatment

DOCTORS from coast to coast were recently asked whether they advised the Nujol type of constipation treatment to their patients. 80.7% answered "Yes". 64% condemned the continued use of laxatives and cathartics. One doctor said, "An almost incalculable amount of injury is done by these intestinal irritants, most of which provide temporary relief only at the cost of permanent injury. Laxatives bring on the laxative habit."

Doctors Advise Nujol Nine doctors out of every ten told us they were advising the Nujol type of treatment for their patients in place of laxatives—and for these reasons: 1. Nujol is not habit-forming; 2. A more natural method; 3. A lubricant is better than a laxative; 4. Does not gripe; 5. Is not irritating; and 6. Nujol gives lasting relief. Unlike Laxatives Laxatives and cathartics act by irritating the intestinal tract. They cause the bowels to frantically expel the contents of the intestines and thus rid the system of the drugs that pills and potions contain. Nujol acts entirely differently. It contains no drugs, no medicine. Its action is mechanical. It merely softens the dried waste matter in the intestines and lubricates the passage so that the muscles of the bowels can expel the waste matter regularly, naturally and thoroughly. Nature-given Remedy Nujol appeals to the medical man because it is a simple, scientific and safe remedy for constipation, no matter how severe the case may be. It is gentle in its action and pleasant to take. Children love it! Get a bottle of Nujol from your druggist today. Doctors advise it for constipation, whether chronic or temporary. Avoid substitutes.

Dried Sugar Beet Pulp or Meal

A supply of the above received. A valuable and inexpensive feed. Special low prices in Ton lots.

If You Are A Dairyman You want to increase the profits from your herd; you want to improve the quality of the milk. You can obtain these results and at the same time bring your cows to a condition of perfect health by feeding Dried Beet Pulp.

If You Feed For Beef You want to shorten your feeding period. You want to crowd the cattle, keeping their appetites keen, so they will make the most gain possible on every bushel of feed. You want them to have a finish and a "bloom" that will bring top prices. You can accomplish these results by feeding Dried Beet Pulp. A great feed for FATTENING HOGS quickly for market.

The Value of Dried Beet Pulp The great value of Dried Beet Pulp lies in the fact that it is the only practical feed that meets fully the vital necessity we have seen for a bulky, palatable and succulent feed.

You have only to watch the cattle eat Dried Beet Pulp just once to appreciate how palatable it is. They take it ravenously. They like it because it is a natural vegetable food. Even while in the pasture, they will eat Dried Beet Pulp with great relish and when deprived of grass food, they do not suffer in health or fall off in milk production, if a suitable proportion of Dried Beet Pulp is included in their ration. In fact, surprising though it may seem, cows often shrink in their milk when deprived of their Dried Beet Pulp and turned out to pasture. TURNIPS will be high in price this Spring. Sell your Turnips and Feed an excellent substitute which is Beet Pulp and you will save money.
