THE COOK'S CORNER Stuffed Onions

Parboil or steam 6 or 8 choice onions about 1 hour. Remove from the water and cut out a circular piece from the top of each to form cups. Chop fine the pieces of onion, add an equal measure of cold, cooked veal or chicken, salt and pepper to season, 1/2 cup each, of fine soft crumbs and melted butter, and mix thoroughly. Season the inside of the cups with salt, then stuff with the prepared mixture. Bake slowly about 1/2 hour, basting with melted butter.

With Sausage: Parboil the requisite number of mild onions about an hour, changing the water twice, reserving the water. Drain and remove the centres, leaving a thin shell of onion. Fill these centres with pork sausage, rounding the top. Bake about an hour, basting four or five times with the dripping in the pan or with melted butter. Serve with white sauce if used as an entree; roast without sauce if used with a rare set turkey accompanied with a salad.

With Rice: Parboil the onions, rinse in cold water and remove the centres. Fill with rice cooked tender in broth, milk or water and seasoned with salt, curry powder, or tomato catsup. Cover with a buttered paper; add broth to the dish and let cook until the onions are tender. Use the liquid in the dish and tomato puree in making a sauce to serve with the onions.

Dorothy Dix's Letter Box

Selfish Wife Who Uses Her Independence as a Club—Is There Any Cure for Boy Crazy? Shall 17-Year-Old Get Married or go to College?

Dear Miss Dix—I am a young man married to a girl 27 years old who holds a good position. Between us we make a fine living. I love her dearly and give her all my time, devotion and money, but my wife wants her own way about everything.

Answer: I should say that it is rank selfishness. She does not consider any one's pleasure but her own, and she takes that ruthlessly, without regard to your happiness.

Selfishness is no new vice among women. There have always been wives who looked upon their husbands as mere appendages to their comfort. There have always been wives who made slaves of their husbands and worked them to death to provide them with luxuries.

Wives who always went out dressed like the Queen of Sheba while their husbands wore last year's suit. Wives who would drag poor, tired husbands get up at night and wash their faces while they got their beauty sleep.

Probably there were always just as many selfish wives as there are at present, but the modern wife who is self-supporting can give a more untrammelled rein to her selfishness and get away with it better than the old-fashioned wife could.

It seems to me that just because a woman is financially independent it is the more reason for her to be considerate of her husband. Theoretically it should make the ideal union, but I am afraid it seldom does.

Nor do husbands and wives always play fair with each other about money. Very often a husband requires his wife to turn over all the money she earns to him and he gives her back a bare pittance out of it.

Dear Dorothy Dix—Is there any cure for boy craziness? I have three girl friends who have gone completely off their heads about boys. They can't talk about anything but boys. They can't sit still and play a game.

What Every Widow Knows! By LUCILLE VAN SLYKE

CHAPTER 43 IN WHICH PARD MAKES AN IMPORTANT DECISION FOR MOLLY

The running-board on Jim Gordon's new car was not, the big police dog found, a comfortable rest-place. He whined his dissatisfaction with it but didn't like the way the two persons in the car on what they had to say to each other that they paid no heed to the impatient growling.

Whereas Molly, who had been all lost in tears, lifted her head from Jimmie's shoulder and laughed softly.

"Poor old Pard!" she murmured sweetly. "Was he tired of such foolishness?"

Jim, furious at such an absurd interruption at so serious a moment, reached out a petulant arm and pushed the dog away. And the dog, balanced precariously on the narrow step, lost his foothold and fell back into the sandy marsh below the pier with a faint yelp of dismay.

"The sound of his horny toenails as he tried to keep his grip on the car door brought a grumbling.

"I'll bet that dog is scratched from bottom to top—" from Jimmie's mouth came a few more comments before, "You delicious little liar! How can you say such absurd things!"

"You know that I love and adore you and that you've made me the proudest man in the world to-night—" his arm crept back about her shoulders, again that awfully sentimental tone slipped into his usually sensible voice.

"I suppose," said Molly, her lips quivering childishly, "that I deserve this idiotic kind of conversation because I eat here like a— a silly boy-kissing servant-girl letting you—oh, I know I don't deserve your respect any more, I'm ashamed."

"Dearest!" Jim protested, "You know that's silly! You know that I love you and love and adore you and that I'm proud—"

"I'm not proud!" Molly barked herself. "I feel humiliated—and I wish you'd take me home—I'm simply wretched."

"Wretched!" Jim echoed in bewilderment. "Why should it make you wretched when you've just made me the happiest of men by promising to marry me?"

"I didn't," Molly cried softly. "You almost did—you meant to—"

"Why, I simply wouldn't dare marry such a fussy old maid as you are, Jimmie! The first time I got a question of when you decide to marry me."

"And I've decided now and for the last time that I won't!" Molly retorted. In her agitation she became pitifully feminine, murmuring quite unreasonably and unfair things.

"The truth was she wasn't half so cross with Jim as she was with herself. She was ashamed that she had let a lonely mood betray her into even momentary tenderness toward a man that she knew she did not love and never could love."

STIMULANTS ARE DANGEROUS! Caffeine Stimulates the Heart. TODAY we know more about the care of the heart than we ever did before. Don't ignore the benefit of that wider knowledge. "Get plenty of sleep," advises the doctor. "Then the heart gets the most rest. The beats are less frequent and periods of rest between the beats are longer."

Postum. Solves Mother's Problem. Children like to have the good drink as the "goose-up." You probably don't give tea or coffee. Make the Postum for those who don't like (but better) than boiling water.

A Morning Smile. NO FOOLER! "A fool and his money are soon parted." That may be, but the difficulty of getting hold of money makes me believe there are fewer fools in the world than is popularly supposed.

New Spring Smartness. Illustrated Dressmaking Lessons. Furnished With Each Pattern. By Ruth Rogers. Here she is showing just how attractive and practical her new model can be. Originally it was carried out in a pretty medium blue and white cotton print. The body jacket was plain darker blue linen-finished cotton.

Eczema on Baby Formed Water Blisters. Healed by Cuticura. "When baby was thirteen months old eczema broke out on his cheeks, his legs from knees to ankles, and his arms from the elbows down. It itched and burned, causing him to scratch, and in a very short time large, sore eruptions formed. It also formed water blisters."

MILDEW ON LINEN. Mildew on linen can often be removed if covered with lemon and salt and left all night. Wash and the stained part in a little milk and leave in the sun to dry. There wash in the usual way.
