Random Reflections

We suspect that Coach Gross must have adopted "goals, goals and more goals" as the slogan for his squad, for even when victory is assured there is no let up in offensive play. There is also a word of praise for the boys behind the blue line. It is apparent as time goes on that they are justifying the faith placed in them by local hockey moguls, and at the same time giving support to their resplendent, gargantuan, more in keeping with his excellent performances.

Clint Benedict is out in the cold. We don't wonder at that, for when an athletic organization fails to kick the cause of responsibility onto the coach. Whereas a winning aggregation respects, as a rule, the man who guided their destinies and made them what they were.

Canada can lay claim to pre-eminence in many things; among them we can mention lighthouses. Her government operates on the coast of British Columbia, four of the most powerful lighthouses in the world. Each emits 300,000 candle power. The lens of the Pachena at Vancouver Island, weighs 31-1/2 tons, and is composed of 600 pieces of glass attached to a framework of metal. This sits on a 3-ton base, which rests on 800 lbs. of mercury, and is so delicately balanced that almost no apparent effort is required to turn it.

While speaking of a subject with a marine taint, we must mention the tide of Saturday night last. Unless the writer misses his guess, it must have been one of the highest tides in years.

Weather prophets will find as yet very little justification for their early predictions of a mild winter. The present trend weather is about on a par with that experienced last year at the time. So, methinks they had better not be overly optimistic in that respect.

Terrence "Tiger" Warrington, the dusky scrapper from Lunenburg, N. S., has at length been humbled, and Mister Steve Carr is the boy to blame for that. It is possible that the fistic ability of Warrington was overrated, but even at that, his Nova Scotia backers are still confident that they have a boy destined to "go up." That, he will, we opine, if he meets no more Steve Carrs.

NORWAY FIRMLY ESTABLISHED AS PRODUCER QUALITY FOX FELTS

From small beginnings, with assistance largely of Canadian experts, the Norwegian silver fox industry has grown to such an extent that it is now well established and the Norwegian pelts have gained a reputation for quality. The Industrial Department of the Canadian National Railways. Some 60,000 to 70,000 skins are pelted annually and fur auctions are held at Oslo, the capital of Norway, this year two such auctions being held, one on November 26th and the other December 13th. The value of the skins sold during the previous year through the Norwegian Silver Fox Breeders Association totalled approximately $93,000, the average price per skin being $42.88. The Norwegian fox farms were stocked originally with foxes from Prince Edward Island ranches.

Bumper Apple Crop Gives Risk To Storage Shortage

Everything seems to have its difficulties and even the bumper apple crop which Nature has yielded in the orchards of the west of England is no exception. Cider manufacturers in this section of England have been working their presses overtime extracting juice from local fruit in an effort to offset the inadequate storage for fresh apples but now they find they have no place to store the cider. Lack of storage is the major difficulty of cider manufacturers for the moment. So great has been the bumper crop that the farmers have gone back to cider production with long-forgotten methods, states the Agricultural Department of the Canadian National Railways, hauling out of storage presses and casks which have been unused for years. Storage difficulty has also upset the farmer, storage for surplus apples which was sufficient in previous years being filled to capacity. The glut of domestic apples on this market this year is having its effect on the Canadian apple industry. This is partly offset for Nova Scotia growers by the biggest market in years being offered in Montreal.

Ship Completes Her 1000th Run

It has been said a ship has a personality. If so, there is one which has acquired a rather colorful aura and she is the "Princess George," Canadian National Steamships, which recently made her 1000th run in the British Columbia coastal service to Alaska. Since the "Princess George" first appeared on the Pacific Coast, fresh from her builders, Swan Hunter at Newcastle-on-Tyne, in England, she has had four skippers, three of whom after quitting the bridge of the "Princess George" entered the pilotage service. Her first skipper Captain George Robertson, is now Director of Pilotage for the Federal Government at Ottawa; her second skipper, Captain F. T. Saunders is now Superintendent of Pilots for British Columbia; the third the late Captain W. G. Morchouse, also joined the Pilotage service on relinquishing command. Her present and fourth commander, Captain H. E. Nedden is a past president of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild and still a director of that organization. The "Princess George" served with distinction during the war years as a hospital ship and in her career in British Columbia coastal waters has catered to the growth of many communities on Canada's western coast. She had also played her part in the tremendous growth of the tourist trade in these waters to Alaska, her years of service, spanning the period during the commencement of this trade which has now grown to vast proportions. The "Princess George" is still going strong and is a familiar sight not only to dwellers along the coast but to the large number of tourists who each year make this delightful trip along the coast of British Columbia to Alaska which has been referred to as the "Norway of America."

CANADA SOURCE OF SUPPLY FOR MEDICINAL PLANTS
From the days of the early alchemists and stretching back into ancient history down to the present day there has always been a market for medicinal roots, herbs and barks. London, Eng., is the great centre for the trade in which Canada is the sole supplier of one important medicinal plant, senega root, of which some 69,775 pounds were shipped to the London market last year, according to the Industrial Department of the Canadian National Railways. Cascares bark is almost of equal importance and this comes from the Pacific Coast, both Canada and the United States figuring as important sources of supply. The bark increases in value with age but most of the importing firms prefer to import the new bark and age it themselves. Balsam comes from North and South America, that from South America being of better quality and preferred for cough mixtures. The North American product, while used medicinally also figures in the printing and lithographing trades. Other medicinal plants supplied by Canada are snake root, hemlock herb, hydrastis or golden seal root.
