Two Americans Enter Hindu Faith

LONDON, Nov. 2.—Professor William Estep, of Philadelphia, and Miss Dora Maxwell, of Indianapolis, have just been initiated into the Hindu faith, according to information reaching here today from Kan-

...al at the Himalayas. At the same time it is reported that they are going to be married next week at the headquarters of Gurukul Academy, centre of Trysarna movement, by the old Swami, Ramkarandas Yogra, by whom they were converted. The wedding ceremony is to take place on a religiously auspicious day.

The conversion ceremony was held on the banks of the sacred River Ganges. It was performed by Ramkarandas, who is the oldest and most highly respected ascetic of Kanakhal, assisted by another representative of the Brahmanism priests, Pandit Janardan Vidya-pathi. More than a thousand persons from the surrounding countryside witnessed the ceremony. After the religious ceremonial a fire was lit and Estep and Miss Maxwell took a solemn pledge accepting the Vedas, oldest of Hindu scriptures and the teaching of the old Hindu sages as their guide in this worldly life.

The professor was accorded the privilege of becoming a teacher of Hindu philosophy with the title of Mahatma, and was named Mahatma Gantama, after one of the oldest teachers of the Hindu philosophy. Miss Maxwell changed her name to Sachivi Ahalabai.

ROBINSON-SKEFFINGTON

At a ceremony performed Oct. 11, at 20 Piedmont St., Salem, Mass. Miss Elinore Elizabeth Robinson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Robinson, became the wife of Richard Walter Skeffington, son of Mrs. Jessie Skeffington. The marriage was performed by Rev. Cornelius Trowbridge of Grace church and was followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents, Raymond Caverly of Salem was the best man and Miss Ruth Robinson attended her sister as maid of honor. The ushers were Francis Breath of Danvers and Winthrop Brewster of Salem.

At the reception Miss Helen Norton was in charge of the guest book, Miss Mildred Robinson the gift room, and the following young women assisted with the serving: Misses Phyllis and Dorothy Robinson, Gertrude Hamilton, Teresa Tobin, Gertrude Powers, Viola Lowe and Alvina Auger. Mr. and Mrs. Skeffington have been honeymooning in the White Mountains and are to make their home at 2 Station Road, Salem.

(Mrs. Neil Robinson, Charlo-tteton and Mr. Earl Skeffington, Brackley Point, uncle and brother of the groom were present at the marriage ceremony and reception.)

What Men Admire in Women Dorothy Dix Rates Cheerful Nature Above Beauty

Most Women Consider Youth and Beauty the Only Charms That Appeal to Men, but Probably Not One Man in Ten Thousand Ever Falls Out of Love With His Wife Because She Has Lost Her Looks

A MAN who has been married for twenty years and is still a husband in good and regular standing said to me the other day: "Women put far too much stress on youth and beauty as allurements for men. They seem to think those are the only two qualities in the whole repertoire of feminine charms that appeal to men, and, especially, that the only way in which a wife can retain her husband's love is by remaining a perpetual flapper."

"Hence the agonies of semi-starvation that nearly every middle-aged woman is undergoing in her attempt to attain a boyish figure. Hence the bobbed hair and the knee-length skirts and the hysterical screaming and jumping around of women who are trying to look young and act young and be cute and girlish after they are grandmothers."

"It's all so pathetic, because it's so useless and so hopeless. No human power can stay the hand of time nor can any human ingenuity manufacture a sympathetic youth that is a substitute for the real thing. When a woman has her face lifted and her hair dyed, the only person she fools into thinking she looks sweet 16 again is herself."

"BEAUTY is bound to go. Youth is bound to go. And it's pitiful to think of the agony that women suffer when they see their good looks fading and feel their high spirits evaporating and think that when these have departed they will have lost their rabbit's foot and have no magic left with which to conjure men."

"FOR, of course, the chief business in life of the average woman is to catch a husband and to keep him eating out of her hand after he is caught, and, if, as she believes, the only thing that attracts him is her physical charms, then she is bound to lose out when these are gone."

"WE MEN are to blame for women believing that the only thing that a man cares for in a woman is her looks, because we are always extolling youth and beauty. The first and only question we ever ask about a strange woman is: 'Is she pretty? Is she young?' We never ask: 'Is she intelligent? Is she interesting? Has she charm?'"

"AND, in every public place it is the good-looking who get the attention and who have all the courtesies offered them. A homely old woman may stand in a street car until she drops with fatigue, but a peachy young girl has half the men on their feet offering her their places. When a woman sees the deference men pay to beauty it's no wonder that they hang on with both hands and their teeth and toenails to such pulchritude as nature bestow upon them."

"THE trouble is that it can't be done. The glossiest hair turns gray. The brightest eyes lose their lustre. The fairest skin its whiteness. No amount of massage will keep the wrinkles away, and my contention is that if women would spend less time and money in trying to preserve their physical charms and more time and effort in developing mental charms they would get better results."

"SO MY advice to the woman who has discovered the first gray hair and a crowfoot that is forming at the corner of her left eye is not to rush off to the beauty parlor, but to pep up her other fascinations."

"LET her make her home more delightful, more a place of peace and rest and comfort. Let her show more interest in her husband, jolly him along more, make herself more of a pal to him. Let her study and read until she can hand out a more entertaining line of conversation, and if she will do these things, believe me, she will have nothing to fear in a competition with all the vamps in creation."

"WIVES are always complaining that their husbands never notice how they look. If they only knew it, this is God's mercy to them, and it is because a man who loves his wife never sees her as anything but the girl he married. So long as he cares for her she always looks sweet and 20 to him, and it is only after his love is dead that he perceives she has got old and fat or is a skinny, ugly old hag."

"PROBABLY not one man in 10,000 ever fell out of love with his wife because she lost her beauty. In fact, he would never have found out that she had lost it if he hadn't seen her with her face distorted with temper or drawn with peevish, fretful whines and complaints and nagging or if he hadn't looked at her clothed in a slovenly wrapper across a dirty tablecloth on which was food that would have killed an ostrich."

"BUT no man ever thought his wife was so homely he couldn't stand to look at her any longer if she turned adoring eyes on him and if her mouth wore the smile that never comes off."

Famine Area Babies Are Slain in China

SHANGHAI, China, Nov. 2.—The China International Famine Relief is being flooded with appeals from the famine-stricken districts, particularly in Shansi, where it is declared, "babies are being killed because there is nothing to feed them with, and children are being sold for a mere song."

"Thousands of persons are said to be living on the bark and leaves of trees. In addition to Shansi, the famine includes districts in Kwang, Honan, Suiyan, Hupeh, Hunan and Honan."

A magistrate of Yang Hsien in a letter estimates that there are 220,000 famine sufferers, owing to the drought and the devastations of the "Red Spears," a guerrilla or bandit organization. The situation in Shansi, the magistrate declares is unprecedented, children being sold openly in the market by parents eager for cash. In Hunan thousands are on the verge of starvation, due to banditry, communist uprisings, the Red Spears and drought.

CONFERENCE ON BITUMINOUS COAL

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 2.—More than a hundred speakers representing twelve countries are tentatively listed to present papers at the Second International Conference on Bituminous Coal to be held under the auspices of the Carnegie Institute of Technology in Pittsburgh, November 19 to 24, 1928, according to a preliminary program announced by President Thomas S. Baker.

According to the plans, ten major subjects are listed for discussion in addition to the address of a general nature to be presented by Lord Melchett, (Sir Alfred Mond), the British capitalist, Georges Claude, the eminent French scientist, Professor Fritz Hofmann, the German scientist, who makes synthetic rubber from coal, Dr. F. Zur Nedden, of Germany, P. G. Tryon of the U. S. Bureau of Mines and others.

Major subjects to be discussed, it is expected, will include "Pulverized Fuel," "Gas Production," "Liquefaction and Hydrogenation," "Pretreatment," "Origin, Composition and Classification of Coals," "High Temperature Carbonization," "Combustion in Furnaces," "Purification and Cleaning," "Tars and Oils," and "Low Temperature Processes."

As indicated in the list of major topics, the chief purpose of the coming conference will be to present the results of recent studies in coal that have to do with improved methods of utilization and combustion. The list of speakers includes the world's leading authorities on the latest development in improved and who love us, no matter whether they have large, soulful eyes and classical contours or their faces are just a scrambled mass of features.

"SO IF I were a woman and had a husband, I wouldn't bother about trying to keep young. I'd keep amiable and sweet. I wouldn't cut down on my calories. I'd cut down on my nagging. I wouldn't worry about retaining my girlish figure. I would put in my time keeping interested in everything, keeping my mind supple and my conversation fresh and entertaining."

"AND if I did this, I wouldn't be afraid that I would lose my attraction for my husband because I had lost my youth and beauty. For I would know that I would always look good to him."

Motoring With Mary

Every revolution of the engine grinds out wisdom for the woman who drives a car, one of them has discovered.

By MARY JANE MOORE

TAKING A DEMONSTRATION

"This car's a little bit stiff, yet," apologized the salesman as we prepared to enter it for the demonstration ride.

"That's all right," said Bob, nodding with what a man likes to call "understanding." "I countered."

"No it isn't either," I countered. "That means we will have to guess at what it would be like if it were not a little bit stiff. For my part, I'd like to leave the soothsaying to a soothsayer. Can you get one that has been broken-in?"

Bob glared—worse than any headlights that ever came over the top of a hill.

"I think I can," answered the salesman. "Please do." I smiled my sweetest. "Remember," I told Bob when the salesman had gone, "a wise man is reputed to be the one who has his after-thoughts before."

A few minutes later the salesman returned with another car, one that he informed us was not even a little bit stiff.

"Will it do 75," I asked.

"Not this morning," he replied. "Where shall we go?" "Anywhere," said Bob.

"That's a generality that glitters with the best," I commented from the rear seat. "As a matter of fact, it has been blind me. What do you say to letting me pick the proving ground? Let's go over every inch of our favorite road to our suburban domicile. Then we can compare speed, acceleration, comfort, deceleration, and everything else about the car with what we have found in our present machine and in our friends' cars over the same route."

"That's a good idea," commented the salesman. Bob thought so, too, but like all husbands, his best thoughts are silent ones.

"We'll do it," said the salesman. "Yes, and so do I when he gets through," I suggested with the idea that it was what the car would do in my hands that was more important than the performance of the salesman.

Although like all wives who drive I never admit it in private, I must confess that Bob is a good driver. Going over the familiar hills, passing over chuck-holes that we had certainly proved its merit under Bob's guidance, and children, the acceleration and deceleration speed that the salesman had said meant more in time saving than a high peak speed. It had beauty and comfort.

"Marvelous," said Bob as his half of the drive came to an end. As I took the seat he vacated behind the wheel, I noticed that either the brake and clutch pedals were too far away from the seat or the seat too far away from the clutch pedals.

"I'm a small woman—" I began, turning to the salesman.

"In a moment, the salesman had adjusted the seat to make it fit. I drove the car down to the sales-room and found it to live up to Bob's adjective perfectly.

"Well—" Bob began as we stopped.

"If we don't find anything better, you certainly have made a sale," I finished the sentence for him as a dutiful wife should.

"Look around," confidently suggested the salesman.

"We will," I said, getting the last two words.

RAMSAY MACDONALD IS ACCEPTED IN SEAHAM

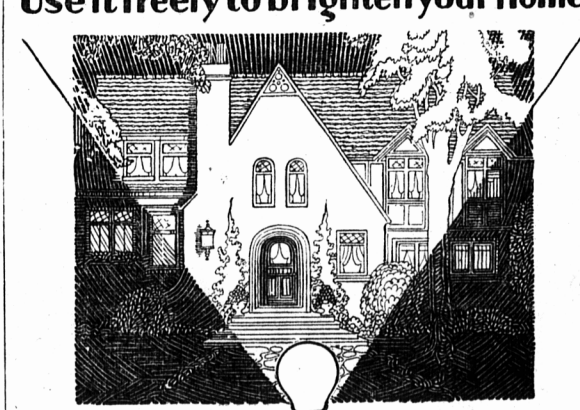

DURHAM, England, Nov. 2.—Labor delegates who crowded the Miner's Hall Eastington Colliery, tonight, adopted Right Hon. Ramsay MacDonald, Labor party leader and former premier, as the Labor party candidate in the forthcoming general elections.

Mr. MacDonald addressed the meeting and said that newspapers had reported that in going to Seaham he was leaving an unsafe seat for a safe seat. They were wrong he declared. His seat in South Wales was as "safe as the Bank of England" but it required a great deal of time to look after it. He predicted the finest victory next year that the Labor Party had ever experienced.
