Archivist Tells About D'Anville's Ill-Fated Armada

Professor D. C. Harvey Would Erect Monument To French High Admiral Whose Body Was Found In Ruins Of Royal Chapel At Louisburg

HALIFAX, N. S., July 9—Nova Scotia cannot have its Wolfe and Montcalm monument but it should be enabled to make a similar gesture through the erection of a monument to Duc d'Anville, luckless French high admiral whose body was found recently in the ruins of the royal chapel at Louisburg, in the opinion of Professor D. C. Harvey, Dominion Archivist at Halifax.

Following the rediscovery of the body, Professor Harvey recalled some of the historical facts in connection with the distinguished Frenchman and the disaster which overtook the fleet he brought across the Atlantic to recapture Louisburg. His story follows:

The rediscovery of Duc d'Anville's remains during the restoration work that is being done at Louisburg by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada will no doubt send many readers back to Parkman's "A Half Century of Conflict" for the graphic story of that luckless expedition which was sent out by France in 1745 to recapture Louisburg and Nova Scotia and carry terror to New England. Already a monument marks the spot near which D'Anville's fleet lay during September and October of that year and where more than 1,100 of his soldiers and sailors died of scurvy and dysentery. As admiral of a fleet that consisted of eleven ships of the line, twenty frigates, and thirty-four transports and fire-ships, sixty-five in all with 3,150 veteran troops on board, he had set out with high hopes and far-reaching aims; but his luck deserted him when he had escaped the British fleet. Buffeted by winds and waves, dispersed and in part wrecked off Sable Island, less than half his fleet and transports reached Chebucto Harbor. Here scurvy and plague attacked his men, he himself died of apoplexy, his vice-admiral d'Estouneul, died of his own hand and La Jonquiere the future governor of Canada had to face the ordeal of restoring the morale of his forces. The latter tried to retrieve his fortunes by taking at least An-

Trujillo Under State Of Siege

LIMA, Peru, July 9—(A.P.)—Civilian berets bearing red flags held the important commercial city of Trujillo today, and the entire country was operating under a state of siege.

The rebels, described by the government as Communists, but from other sources called members of the Aprista opposition, seized Trujillo from a small garrison of troops and police after a long battle yesterday, in which many were killed or wounded on both sides.

Similar civilian groups fought skirmishes with police at Puerto Chicama and Pailan and several persons were killed in these encounters.

YORK SCHOOL, 1932

The close of the year in school has come
 And we are gathered here,
 To get our marks, to make our bows,
 And wish you All Good Cheer.

The noise and clamor of classroom work
 Is over again at last,
 And now that we are free to leave
 We want to go back to the past.

For there were days that were dreary and hard,
 And there were days that were bright
 But we want you to know that thro' it all
 You did what was true and right.

And we thank you for all the work you have done
 For us and the other fellows—
 And to show our gratitude and love
 We give you this umbrella!

MY SON will go to college

Can you say this of your little son—or daughter?

YOU know the advantage of a college education.
 How large corporations are now looking to college graduates to eventually fill their responsible positions.

You intend to give your boy or girl a college education—but are you sure you will live long enough to provide it? Or if you do, that funds will be on hand when he needs them—$1,000 a year, say, for 4 years?

The problem can be settled very readily through an Imperial Educational Endowment Policy. The yearly deposits are small and vary in amount according to age. Even these are cancelled should the father die or become totally disabled before his child is ready for college.

Your child should have this splendid safeguard. Write for particulars today.
