SMILES

"Kitty says she is weary of living in a small apartment."
"Case of flat tire, eh?"

"Howdy, old man! Have you quite recovered from your accident?"
"No, not fully."
"Why you look as well as ever."
"Yes, but I owe the doctor fifteen dollars yet."

"Where are you going to spend Christmas this year?"
"It will be either at my folks' or my wife's. We haven't quarrelled about that yet."

"I wouldn't associate with him. I understand he served a term in prison."
"That's true, but it was for an offense involving a million dollars or more; nothing really disgraceful you know."

HOW MANY?
"Now, boys," said the school teacher, "is there any question you would like to ask me about long measure before I pass on to the next class?"
"Yes, sir," said Jimmy Jones. "How many policemen's feet does it take to make a Scotland Yard?"

Periodic—Eye Examinations

Are vitally important, whether one's eyes are good or otherwise.

Don't wear your glasses for five or ten years, as some do, without re-examination, for in that time serious changes may take place, which if not discovered, may work permanent injury to the most precious sense you possess.

Guard your eyes.

INSTALLMENT 7

"Do you really think that I didn't know that I was going to meet the girl of the broken necklace, when I met my hostess this evening?" Her eyes were wide and innocent.

"The very day after I met you in Bond St., I saw a picture of you in the paper, with your father and—Ames . . ." he told her slowly.

"I told Perry I must come to this birthday party of yours, or . . . well, or that he'd get the sack."

She was not looking at him now, but she seemed to feel his look upon her face, even though she could not meet it. He must love her, then! To have made himself a promise just because of that one meeting with her! There was something very wonderful in that. . . . The romance of it filled her heart, with such a happiness that she scarcely knew how to endure it.

"Did you imagine that that first meeting of ours was to be our last?" he demanded, after a moment.

"I didn't definitely think . . ." she stammered. "I mean . . ."

"You mean that you had forgotten all about me until you saw me again this evening?" he challenged her.

"No! I'd thought of you . . . often. . . . You must know I had!" she cried.

"Yes, I did know you had."
"Then why ask? Just to be disconcerting?"

"Why not just to hear you say it?" he countered. And she let it go at that.

He said no more for some time, and when he did speak again it was of more ordinary things. To talk quite lightly and conventionally seemed to be a physical impossibility to him; but he was not quite so pertinaciously personal again until supper was over and they were once more entering the ballroom.

"Now, I suppose, you will say that you have to go and dance?" he said.

She didn't want to, but she had to say it.

"Yes, I must."
"Come and spend the fourth dance with me?" As he said it, it was only half a question. The other half was sheer command.

"Yes, I'll like to . . . Where shall we meet?" She found it awfully difficult to put on a formal tone successfully.

"Out on the verandah. Will that do?"

"Yes . . . thank you . . ."

She turned away as St. Abb came toward her, with obvious intention in his eye.

But Lee caught her arm and made her face him again.

"You are going to dance because it is your duty as hostess, but you would rather be with me?" he said quickly, in a low voice. She looked up hastily, away all round, then up again. . . . His dark eyes seemed to look very deep into her own. His hand on her arm set her heart beating wildly.

"You . . . you know I would!" she whispered, feeling wringing the admission from her.

"All right, then; I'll let you dance." He released her, and she went off with St. Abb.

How she managed to live through the next three dances she scarcely knew, although St. Abb made it easier than it might have been by riding the whole time of his chief acting.

"I'm awfully sorry . . . Is there glowing admiration that she found her heart beating with a new feeling; a feeling of possessive pride; as if she were listening to praise of something that was already definitely hers. At the finish of the third dance, she was just starting the hand over hers, as it touched the hand over hers, and she took it, do . . . Whatever can be done, Over the rail, from her stop or three I've got to do myself . . . You've steps of advantage, she looked down into Lee's face.

"The next dance is my dance," he reminded her.
"Yes; I am going to get a cloak; you said the verandah, you know."

"So long as you haven't forgotten," he said.
She glanced quickly at his big hand over hers.

"Did you think I'd forget?" she asked softly.

"I pretty well knew you wouldn't. But I like to make sure of things . . ." he answered. "Go and fetch your cloak."

She moved one step up, but his hand still held hers tight down to the banister, and again she had to stop.

She looked down at him, laughing, her eyes like big blue stars.

He suddenly realized, then, that she was beautiful. He had been so engrossed with the progress of his schemes that all the exquisite young loveliness of her had not seemed important to him. But he realized it acutely now, and his triumph rose higher still. Not only Ames, but all the world might well envy him the winning of this girl! So much the better. It made his victory all the greater.

He looked up, laughingly, too.

If St. Abb had been within earshot, he might have noticed that that laugh was a shade nearer to being a real laugh than any he had ever heard from Lee. The merest shade, but still, nearer. And if Lee himself had noticed it, he might have heard in it a note of warning. But he did not notice it; and so the warning went by him. . . . The moment he lifted his hand and set her free, and, light-footed, she went on her way upstairs.

Lucy Is Won

She was crossing the wide landing at the top of the first flight when, to her utter surprise, Jocelyn Upton called to her from the depths of a wide window-seat. She turned swiftly, her skirts ballooning snowily.

"Why, hullo, Jocelyn, what are you doing here, all alone?" she said.

"I'm docked for repairs," answered Jocelyn, her voice oddly curt. She still held the tinted cigarette in the long amber holder, but she wasn't smoking. She looked rather queer and tense; her very red lips were pressed tight and her long narrow eyes looked up at Lucy with a curious expression; almost hostility.

"Has your dress got torn?" asked Lucy, with a little laugh.

"No, My heart has!" There was no laugh in Jocelyn's voice. But Lucy didn't take it seriously. Jocelyn always seemed rather inclined to do and say things for effect.

"What can I offer you for that?" she said lightly.

Jocelyn rose suddenly and came in her lithe, willow way, to Lucy. Her eyes were flashing angrily.

"Oh, you can laugh!" she said, in a low tense voice. "It's nothing to you is it?"

Lucy moved back a step, the smile gone from her lips.

"Jocelyn, I don't understand. What have I done? Aren't you having a good time?"

"A good time!" echoed Jocelyn bitterly.

Lucy still couldn't altogether get rid of the idea that she was playing the whole time of his chief acting.

"I'm awfully sorry . . . Is there glowing admiration that she found her heart beating with a new feeling; a feeling of possessive pride; as if she were listening to praise of something that was already definitely hers. At the finish of the third dance, she was just starting the hand over hers, as it touched the hand over hers, and she took it, do . . . Proposes Treaty With Canada

(By Ken Clark, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 21.—Senator Hamilton F. Kean, of New Jersey, today proposed to the Senate the negotiation of a treaty with Canada for the purpose of establishing by law the parity of the Canadian dollar with that of the United States dollar and the appointment of a Canadian member to the federal reserve board of the United States.

To the Canadian Press, Senator Kean said he preferred not to expose at this time the mechanics by means of which his proposal could be carried into effect. Senator Kean said: "This is intended to be a friendly gesture toward Canada."

His resolution, he said, was the outgrowth of agitation for an increase in the tariff to counter-balance the exchange differential. As an alternative he presented the following proposition:

That the President of the United States is requested to enter into negotiations with the Government of the Dominion of Canada with the view to conclusion of a treaty with that government under the terms of which:

A representative of the Government of Canada appointed by the Governor General with the consent of the Parliament of Canada shall be a member of the federal reserve board;

Provision shall be made for stabilization of the currency of Canada at a parity of value with the similar standard of currency in the United States and for the maintenance of such parity. Business people, the Senator said, were complaining about the exchange differential. Every time they ship some thing to Canada or your people ship here the shippers are gambling on the exchange rate. You can't do business on that basis."

Senator Kean, referring to the continual passage of United States and Canadian citizens across the border, said "they have been accustomed to walking across, but with the fluctuation in exchange they don't know where they're at. If they have Canadian funds and go to a bank they get one-fifth off which isn't good business, either for you or for us."

The Senator said he did not know what reception his proposition would have in administration circles. He said further he assumed representatives of the border States in Congress would be in favor of it.

got this dance with Jim, haven't you?" she finished abruptly.

"Yes," answered Lucy.

"I know, I heard. I . . . saw, too. I was looking over the banister just now while he was talking to you. You've made a bit of a conquest, haven't you?"

Lucy colored like a poppy. She did wish, with Jocelyn's narrow eyes looking at her, that she didn't blush quite so childishly easily. She only said:

"How absurd! Jocelyn, won't you come down and dance?"

Turkey Raising Very Profitable

MINDEMOYA, Manitoulin Island, Ont., Dec. 21.—(By The Canadian Press)—Forty two years ago there wasn't a turkey on the Manitoulin Island. This week more than 10,000 fine succulent birds were shipped to all parts of Canada and the United States, and the raisers — with pride in their hearts and money in the bank—prepared to raise another crop of Manitoulin's most famous product.

It's a strange tale—this story of the growth of an industry from nothing to one of major proportions. Away back in 1890 the residents on the Island were afflicted with a plague of grasshoppers. It was hard slogging in those days, and the pioneers were sadly bothered by the plague. Crops raised from what was practically a wilderness were destroyed overnight and the residents were desperate.

A. J. Wagg, Sr., one of the pioneers, had heard somewhere, some time, that turkeys simply thrived on grasshoppers. He promptly went into action and imported a small flock of the birds from the main-land. Sure enough, the turkeys did thrive. Each year Mr. Wagg shipped his surplus birds away. Others on the Island became interested. They sought information. From a somewhat wary, tough strain, the birds were gradually brought to their present hardy but tender-on-the-bone condition.

The Dominion Government some years ago established a bureau on the Island in order that breeders might obtain the fullest and latest information on turkeys and their care. And has the business paid into action and imported a small flock of the birds from the main-land and pat's his pocket.
