

"FORCE" keeps the brain "waked-up" all day. No matter whether you write or figure or saw wood or pound stone: You'll do it the better for eating "FORCE."

100 MEN WANTED

To work on the Murray Harbor Branch Railway.

Apply on the work or at my office, Murray River.

WILLARD KITCHEN, 5-18 dw 1m.

IF MEN

find delight in varied beauty the styles for this season should fill their souls with pleasure. Never before in the history of tailoring have fashions been more attractive, but unless placed in the hands of a good tailor they are useless. So be careful about your choice of a tailor. We are the ones to patronize. Give us a trial and be convinced that we are equalled by few and excelled by none.

McDonald & Perry, THE NOBBY TAILOR, Great George Street.

WANTED!

The man who always drops his chains watch to call at our establishment.

A chain on a watch is economy. We are making a specialty of chains of various styles and prices. Call and select.

L. W. COOK, Jeweler, Cor. Gt. George and Grafton

Beau Gallant

[34883] Foaled 1901, sired by Bow Bells 2.19, best son of Electioneer. The dam of Beau Gallant is Directress 2.19 by Director. Directress is also the dam of Fenella 2.13 and Fenella is the dam of Todd and Sadie Mack 2.11, the two fastest colt trotters the world ever saw. Sadie Mack is the unbeaten 3 year old of 1903, won in four stake races $18,500 and afterwards sold for $20,000; she is picked as a two minute prospect for 1904. Beau Gallant is 3 years old this spring; he is a beautiful dapple bay, strong at every point, disposition perfect, a remarkably handsome horse and for style, action and breeding has no equal in this country; he is a pure gaited trotter from a trotting family. Beau Gallant will make the season of 1904 at my stables, Kent Street. Terms $15.00, usual return privilege. W. S. MCKIE, Owner. CHAS. WILLIAMS, in charge. May 23, 25, 27, w21

PARKSIDE

2.22 3-4 Owing to the large demand for the service of Parkside, the owner thinks it unwise to travel him, and he will therefore stand at the owner's stables, Summerside, for the season of 1904. Parkside added four to the 2.30 list last season, making a total of ten 2.30 performers to his credit. All mares at owner's risk. JAMES A. McNEILL, JOHN STEEL, Manager. 5-17 d&6wE

ELOQUENT GREETING FROM CANADIAN METHODISM

The Full Address of the Rev. Wm. Dobson at Los Angeles, Cal.—A Magnificent Effort.

The address of the Rev. W. Dobson, the coming pastor of the First Methodist church here, is spoken of by many papers as the most eloquent heard at the great conference held at Los Angeles. The reverend gentleman, who was the representative of Canadian Methodism at that great meeting was introduced by Hon. W. R. Warrock of the Chalmersian

HEAD SOLID SORE

Awful Suffering of Baby and Sleepless Nights of Mother.

CURED BY CUTICURA

Skin Fair as a Lily with no Scar to Recall Awful Sore Writes Mother.

"I herewith write out in full the beginning and end of that terrible disease, eczema, which caused my babe untold suffering and myself many sleepless nights.

"My babe was born seemingly a fair, healthy child, but when she was three weeks old a swelling appeared on the back of her head, and in course of time broke. It did not heal but grew worse, and the sore spread from the size of a dime to that of a dollar. I used all kinds of remedies that I could think of, but nothing seemed to help; in fact, it grew worse. Her hair fell out where the sore was, and I feared it would never grow again. It continued until my aged father came on a visit, and when he saw the baby he told me to get Cuticura Soap and Ointment right away. "To please him I did so, and to my surprise by their use the sore began to heal over, the hair grew over it, and to-day she has a nice head of hair, her skin is as fair as a lily, and she has no scar left to recall that awful sore, and it is over eight months and no sign of its returning."

Mrs. Wm. RYER, Elk River, Minn. "Cure permanent." So writes Mrs. Ryer, Feb. 25, 1903, six years later: "Your letter of the 19th inst. received, asking in regard to the cure of my baby some six years ago. Well, the disease has never returned to her head which at that time was a solid sore on top and down the back. Once or twice since then a patch has come on her hand near the wrist, but it finally disappeared after proper treatment with Cuticura."

Cuticura Soap, liquid and in the form of Chocolate Coated Pills, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap are sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27 Chancery Lane; Paris, 4 Boulevard de la Madeleine; Toronto, 357 Bay Street; Sydney, 127 Columbus Ave.; Foster Drug & Chemical Co., Sole Importers. Send for "How to Cure Eczema."

MOULASSES AND SUGAR

Now due to arrive from Barbadoes a carefully selected cargo of Sugar and Molasses.

Lowest prices quoted while landing.

Horace Haszard,

14 THE W 210

50,000 dozen EGGS WANTED.

Also buyers of calfskins and hides

John Hopkins,

St. John, N. B., Established 1867.

WANTED.

An experienced Fisherman at Hotel Acadia, Tracadie from June to October. Good wages given. Apply at Hotel. May 23, 1904. I. C. HALL, 21 d 2w

Most men are wearing Weeks' up-to-date hats.

Conference who in closing the introductory remarks said: Now, Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to present to this conference one of the typical representatives of Canadian Methodism, the peerless orator, the faithful pastor, Rev. Wm. Dobson, pastor of the Windsor Methodist Church, Nova Scotia Conference.

Mr. Dobson said: Mr. President and brethren in the pit, and all the ladies and gentlemen in the galleries. [Laughter.] I once heard a very eminent judge commend his speech to a jury by saying: "It is now my desire, gentlemen of the jury, to say several things to you before I begin to speak. I do not just know the nationality of that judge."

So, with your permission, Mr. President and Ladies and Gentlemen, I too, should like to say a few things this morning before I begin to speak. I want to say that I am delighted when I remember that I had not to come on yesterday after the delegates from across the ocean. For, I assure you, that I make no pretensions that characterized much of the speaking to which we listened yesterday. I want to say, also, before I begin to speak, that it has been a great delight to me to sit day after day in this vast conference listening to your speakers, studying your methods of business, and catching, so far as it is possible, for me to catch, the genius and trend of your apparently far-reaching purpose. What has surprised me, however, more than anything else, is to see the wonderful amount of sanctified common sense, if I do not know any better word for it, and statesmanlike ability, that you have been bringing to bear upon almost everything that has come up before the conference for discussion; and the impression which you have left upon me, a stranger, is something like this: That with such sane enthusiasm, consecrated ability, the Methodist Episcopal Church alone ought to be able to hold this great nation of yours along the pathway which leads to the highest, possible Christian civilization. [Applause.]

I want to say, further, that it has been a very great delight to me to look into the faces of so many good-looking men with whom I am, or seem to be, almost familiarly acquainted. [Hear! Hear!] I have read their books. I have studied their speeches until I am not sure today as to how much of my own philosophy of life has really been conditioned by their thought.

But, speaking of reading books, reminds me of the fact that some three or four years ago I read a very ably written book, written by one of the prominent members of this conference, on "The Art of Eloquent Speaking." [Laughter and applause.] And I closed it with this almost solemn thought, that if any one during the next 100 years attempted to write a book on that subject they would have to go to other worlds for their material. [Great laughter.] For Dr. Buckley has certainly left them nothing unused in this. From that time until the present I have looked upon it as a misfortune to have died until I have first looked into the face of the author of that great book. [Applause.] But, like Caesar's celebrated message to the Roman Senate, "I came; I saw—well, I am satisfied." [Laughter and applause.] The last is not a literal rendering of Caesar's Latin, however.

However, Mr. President, I am not here to give my own impressions or even to state my own opinions. I have been sent by the Canadian Church a distance of 4000 miles. O! that wild, that weird journey, over the Rockies and over the plains! But I am here to say to you that there lives on the northern side of your boundary a people not just like those who found the Gauls differing in language and law, and in institutions, but a people strong and from the same stock as yourselves; inheriting all the peculiarities and the genius that has stamped the Anglo-Saxon race with a certain kind of immortality. They talk the same tongue as yourselves, and when they write their literature they use the language of Shakespeare and Newton, and in their Shakespearian and more familiar intercourse with one another they talk the simpler language of Bunyan, just as you do yourselves.

As to their institutions, it is very obvious, I think, even to the stranger, that they have grown up with slightly different conceptions of human relations; and as a consequence they have taken on different forms and slightly different names. We may give them different forms and places, but nevertheless they have many things in common with ourselves. They have grown out of and are permeated through and through, with that old, common law of England, so that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary; so sacred that its principles condition the procedure of every court in the two lands today. Not only this, but they have, with us, other institutions like yourselves which have for their ultimate object the development of the civilization in which the individual may realize in actual experience that manhood and freedom which has made him an heir in virtue of being born in the image of God. Not only so, but we have a country over there, which, like your own, stretches all the way from the Atlantic to the Pacific. And by the way, the coast line upon the Pacific is not just so long as we could have wished it to be. [Great laughter.] Particularly on the

of some psychological states into which our British judges are apt to fall sometimes. But for all this the area of the Dominion is about as large as that of the United States, having a climate admirably adapted to the exceptional peculiarities of the Anglo-Saxon race. For you know, while it is said that vegetation may grow rank and tall in the tropics, a tropical sun will always melt the iron in the Anglo-Saxon blood. In dealing with us, nature has been wonderfully kind. To shield us from the scorching of winter, she has erected right back of us an enormous North Pole. I wish you could see it. [Laughter and applause.] You really have nothing like it in the United States. [Laughter.] I had almost said I would have brought it with me but the Government has absolutely refused to allow any man to look at it for the last six thousand years. Nature has also guaranteed us against anything like drought or famine, because she has placed within our boundaries all the fresh water of the globe, and two-thirds of the wheat-growing belt of the continent. We have a wonderful country over there. We are proud of it. It is, in fact, like Virgil's cottage, "rich in all weal, all means of rule," and I want to say for your consolation too that I, have been, during the last four years, from one end of it to the other and I have never heard it seriously hinted by Canadians that there was any intention on their part to forcefully annex the United States to Canada. [Great laughter and applause.] While that is true, dear brethren, still we are interested in you, intensely interested. We are watching you critically, though very sympathetically. We are looking to you to solve what we Canadians think to be the problem of the twentieth century. We are looking to you to build up a civilization in which the man and the woman, the statesman and the preacher will be alike conditioned by the same system of ethics and that system, the Sermon on the Mount, uttered by the Christ of God. [Applause.] This was not always so, you remember. Men otherwise good, thought they could hide their individual responsibility in the nation or in the army or in the corporation to which they belonged, and, as a consequence, do many things contrary to the teaching of Jesus at Nazareth, and when pressed for the ethical value of their actions, they would invariably take refuge behind that doctrine of the Jesuits that "the end justifies the means." That is what we do in war, in politics, in civil government, and a thousand other things. But men are beginning to question very seriously today as to whether there are two systems of ethics at all. They are beginning to hesitate before they will even accept the commands of the nation as final, when those commands run counter to the teachings of Jesus Christ. It was said by one whom you hold to be supreme authority here, as well as on the other side, that He loved me and gave Himself for me.

of some psychological states into which our British judges are apt to fall sometimes. But for all this the area of the Dominion is about as large as that of the United States, having a climate admirably adapted to the exceptional peculiarities of the Anglo-Saxon race. For you know, while it is said that vegetation may grow rank and tall in the tropics, a tropical sun will always melt the iron in the Anglo-Saxon blood. In dealing with us, nature has been wonderfully kind. To shield us from the scorching of winter, she has erected right back of us an enormous North Pole. I wish you could see it. [Laughter and applause.] You really have nothing like it in the United States. [Laughter.] I had almost said I would have brought it with me but the Government has absolutely refused to allow any man to look at it for the last six thousand years. Nature has also guaranteed us against anything like drought or famine, because she has placed within our boundaries all the fresh water of the globe, and two-thirds of the wheat-growing belt of the continent. We have a wonderful country over there. We are proud of it. It is, in fact, like Virgil's cottage, "rich in all weal, all means of rule," and I want to say for your consolation too that I, have been, during the last four years, from one end of it to the other and I have never heard it seriously hinted by Canadians that there was any intention on their part to forcefully annex the United States to Canada. [Great laughter and applause.] While that is true, dear brethren, still we are interested in you, intensely interested. We are watching you critically, though very sympathetically. We are looking to you to solve what we Canadians think to be the problem of the twentieth century. We are looking to you to build up a civilization in which the man and the woman, the statesman and the preacher will be alike conditioned by the same system of ethics and that system, the Sermon on the Mount, uttered by the Christ of God. [Applause.] This was not always so, you remember. Men otherwise good, thought they could hide their individual responsibility in the nation or in the army or in the corporation to which they belonged, and, as a consequence, do many things contrary to the teaching of Jesus at Nazareth, and when pressed for the ethical value of their actions, they would invariably take refuge behind that doctrine of the Jesuits that "the end justifies the means." That is what we do in war, in politics, in civil government, and a thousand other things. But men are beginning to question very seriously today as to whether there are two systems of ethics at all. They are beginning to hesitate before they will even accept the commands of the nation as final, when those commands run counter to the teachings of Jesus Christ. It was said by one whom you hold to be supreme authority here, as well as on the other side, that He loved me and gave Himself for me.

of some psychological states into which our British judges are apt to fall sometimes. But for all this the area of the Dominion is about as large as that of the United States, having a climate admirably adapted to the exceptional peculiarities of the Anglo-Saxon race. For you know, while it is said that vegetation may grow rank and tall in the tropics, a tropical sun will always melt the iron in the Anglo-Saxon blood. In dealing with us, nature has been wonderfully kind. To shield us from the scorching of winter, she has erected right back of us an enormous North Pole. I wish you could see it. [Laughter and applause.] You really have nothing like it in the United States. [Laughter.] I had almost said I would have brought it with me but the Government has absolutely refused to allow any man to look at it for the last six thousand years. Nature has also guaranteed us against anything like drought or famine, because she has placed within our boundaries all the fresh water of the globe, and two-thirds of the wheat-growing belt of the continent. We have a wonderful country over there. We are proud of it. It is, in fact, like Virgil's cottage, "rich in all weal, all means of rule," and I want to say for your consolation too that I, have been, during the last four years, from one end of it to the other and I have never heard it seriously hinted by Canadians that there was any intention on their part to forcefully annex the United States to Canada. [Great laughter and applause.] While that is true, dear brethren, still we are interested in you, intensely interested. We are watching you critically, though very sympathetically. We are looking to you to solve what we Canadians think to be the problem of the twentieth century. We are looking to you to build up a civilization in which the man and the woman, the statesman and the preacher will be alike conditioned by the same system of ethics and that system, the Sermon on the Mount, uttered by the Christ of God. [Applause.] This was not always so, you remember. Men otherwise good, thought they could hide their individual responsibility in the nation or in the army or in the corporation to which they belonged, and, as a consequence, do many things contrary to the teaching of Jesus at Nazareth, and when pressed for the ethical value of their actions, they would invariably take refuge behind that doctrine of the Jesuits that "the end justifies the means." That is what we do in war, in politics, in civil government, and a thousand other things. But men are beginning to question very seriously today as to whether there are two systems of ethics at all. They are beginning to hesitate before they will even accept the commands of the nation as final, when those commands run counter to the teachings of Jesus Christ. It was said by one whom you hold to be supreme authority here, as well as on the other side, that He loved me and gave Himself for me.

of some psychological states into which our British judges are apt to fall sometimes. But for all this the area of the Dominion is about as large as that of the United States, having a climate admirably adapted to the exceptional peculiarities of the Anglo-Saxon race. For you know, while it is said that vegetation may grow rank and tall in the tropics, a tropical sun will always melt the iron in the Anglo-Saxon blood. In dealing with us, nature has been wonderfully kind. To shield us from the scorching of winter, she has erected right back of us an enormous North Pole. I wish you could see it. [Laughter and applause.] You really have nothing like it in the United States. [Laughter.] I had almost said I would have brought it with me but the Government has absolutely refused to allow any man to look at it for the last six thousand years. Nature has also guaranteed us against anything like drought or famine, because she has placed within our boundaries all the fresh water of the globe, and two-thirds of the wheat-growing belt of the continent. We have a wonderful country over there. We are proud of it. It is, in fact, like Virgil's cottage, "rich in all weal, all means of rule," and I want to say for your consolation too that I, have been, during the last four years, from one end of it to the other and I have never heard it seriously hinted by Canadians that there was any intention on their part to forcefully annex the United States to Canada. [Great laughter and applause.] While that is true, dear brethren, still we are interested in you, intensely interested. We are watching you critically, though very sympathetically. We are looking to you to solve what we Canadians think to be the problem of the twentieth century. We are looking to you to build up a civilization in which the man and the woman, the statesman and the preacher will be alike conditioned by the same system of ethics and that system, the Sermon on the Mount, uttered by the Christ of God. [Applause.] This was not always so, you remember. Men otherwise good, thought they could hide their individual responsibility in the nation or in the army or in the corporation to which they belonged, and, as a consequence, do many things contrary to the teaching of Jesus at Nazareth, and when pressed for the ethical value of their actions, they would invariably take refuge behind that doctrine of the Jesuits that "the end justifies the means." That is what we do in war, in politics, in civil government, and a thousand other things. But men are beginning to question very seriously today as to whether there are two systems of ethics at all. They are beginning to hesitate before they will even accept the commands of the nation as final, when those commands run counter to the teachings of Jesus Christ. It was said by one whom you hold to be supreme authority here, as well as on the other side, that He loved me and gave Himself for me.

of some psychological states into which our British judges are apt to fall sometimes. But for all this the area of the Dominion is about as large as that of the United States, having a climate admirably adapted to the exceptional peculiarities of the Anglo-Saxon race. For you know, while it is said that vegetation may grow rank and tall in the tropics, a tropical sun will always melt the iron in the Anglo-Saxon blood. In dealing with us, nature has been wonderfully kind. To shield us from the scorching of winter, she has erected right back of us an enormous North Pole. I wish you could see it. [Laughter and applause.] You really have nothing like it in the United States. [Laughter.] I had almost said I would have brought it with me but the Government has absolutely refused to allow any man to look at it for the last six thousand years. Nature has also guaranteed us against anything like drought or famine, because she has placed within our boundaries all the fresh water of the globe, and two-thirds of the wheat-growing belt of the continent. We have a wonderful country over there. We are proud of it. It is, in fact, like Virgil's cottage, "rich in all weal, all means of rule," and I want to say for your consolation too that I, have been, during the last four years, from one end of it to the other and I have never heard it seriously hinted by Canadians that there was any intention on their part to forcefully annex the United States to Canada. [Great laughter and applause.] While that is true, dear brethren, still we are interested in you, intensely interested. We are watching you critically, though very sympathetically. We are looking to you to solve what we Canadians think to be the problem of the twentieth century. We are looking to you to build up a civilization in which the man and the woman, the statesman and the preacher will be alike conditioned by the same system of ethics and that system, the Sermon on the Mount, uttered by the Christ of God. [Applause.] This was not always so, you remember. Men otherwise good, thought they could hide their individual responsibility in the nation or in the army or in the corporation to which they belonged, and, as a consequence, do many things contrary to the teaching of Jesus at Nazareth, and when pressed for the ethical value of their actions, they would invariably take refuge behind that doctrine of the Jesuits that "the end justifies the means." That is what we do in war, in politics, in civil government, and a thousand other things. But men are beginning to question very seriously today as to whether there are two systems of ethics at all. They are beginning to hesitate before they will even accept the commands of the nation as final, when those commands run counter to the teachings of Jesus Christ. It was said by one whom you hold to be supreme authority here, as well as on the other side, that He loved me and gave Himself for me.

of some psychological states into which our British judges are apt to fall sometimes. But for all this the area of the Dominion is about as large as that of the United States, having a climate admirably adapted to the exceptional peculiarities of the Anglo-Saxon race. For you know, while it is said that vegetation may grow rank and tall in the tropics, a tropical sun will always melt the iron in the Anglo-Saxon blood. In dealing with us, nature has been wonderfully kind. To shield us from the scorching of winter, she has erected right back of us an enormous North Pole. I wish you could see it. [Laughter and applause.] You really have nothing like it in the United States. [Laughter.] I had almost said I would have brought it with me but the Government has absolutely refused to allow any man to look at it for the last six thousand years. Nature has also guaranteed us against anything like drought or famine, because she has placed within our boundaries all the fresh water of the globe, and two-thirds of the wheat-growing belt of the continent. We have a wonderful country over there. We are proud of it. It is, in fact, like Virgil's cottage, "rich in all weal, all means of rule," and I want to say for your consolation too that I, have been, during the last four years, from one end of it to the other and I have never heard it seriously hinted by Canadians that there was any intention on their part to forcefully annex the United States to Canada. [Great laughter and applause.] While that is true, dear brethren, still we are interested in you, intensely interested. We are watching you critically, though very sympathetically. We are looking to you to solve what we Canadians think to be the problem of the twentieth century. We are looking to you to build up a civilization in which the man and the woman, the statesman and the preacher will be alike conditioned by the same system of ethics and that system, the Sermon on the Mount, uttered by the Christ of God. [Applause.] This was not always so, you remember. Men otherwise good, thought they could hide their individual responsibility in the nation or in the army or in the corporation to which they belonged, and, as a consequence, do many things contrary to the teaching of Jesus at Nazareth, and when pressed for the ethical value of their actions, they would invariably take refuge behind that doctrine of the Jesuits that "the end justifies the means." That is what we do in war, in politics, in civil government, and a thousand other things. But men are beginning to question very seriously today as to whether there are two systems of ethics at all. They are beginning to hesitate before they will even accept the commands of the nation as final, when those commands run counter to the teachings of Jesus Christ. It was said by one whom you hold to be supreme authority here, as well as on the other side, that He loved me and gave Himself for me.

of some psychological states into which our British judges are apt to fall sometimes. But for all this the area of the Dominion is about as large as that of the United States, having a climate admirably adapted to the exceptional peculiarities of the Anglo-Saxon race. For you know, while it is said that vegetation may grow rank and tall in the tropics, a tropical sun will always melt the iron in the Anglo-Saxon blood. In dealing with us, nature has been wonderfully kind. To shield us from the scorching of winter, she has erected right back of us an enormous North Pole. I wish you could see it. [Laughter and applause.] You really have nothing like it in the United States. [Laughter.] I had almost said I would have brought it with me but the Government has absolutely refused to allow any man to look at it for the last six thousand years. Nature has also guaranteed us against anything like drought or famine, because she has placed within our boundaries all the fresh water of the globe, and two-thirds of the wheat-growing belt of the continent. We have a wonderful country over there. We are proud of it. It is, in fact, like Virgil's cottage, "rich in all weal, all means of rule," and I want to say for your consolation too that I, have been, during the last four years, from one end of it to the other and I have never heard it seriously hinted by Canadians that there was any intention on their part to forcefully annex the United States to Canada. [Great laughter and applause.] While that is true, dear brethren, still we are interested in you, intensely interested. We are watching you critically, though very sympathetically. We are looking to you to solve what we Canadians think to be the problem of the twentieth century. We are looking to you to build up a civilization in which the man and the woman, the statesman and the preacher will be alike conditioned by the same system of ethics and that system, the Sermon on the Mount, uttered by the Christ of God. [Applause.] This was not always so, you remember. Men otherwise good, thought they could hide their individual responsibility in the nation or in the army or in the corporation to which they belonged, and, as a consequence, do many things contrary to the teaching of Jesus at Nazareth, and when pressed for the ethical value of their actions, they would invariably take refuge behind that doctrine of the Jesuits that "the end justifies the means." That is what we do in war, in politics, in civil government, and a thousand other things. But men are beginning to question very seriously today as to whether there are two systems of ethics at all. They are beginning to hesitate before they will even accept the commands of the nation as final, when those commands run counter to the teachings of Jesus Christ. It was said by one whom you hold to be supreme authority here, as well as on the other side, that He loved me and gave Himself for me.

A DUTY WOMEN OWE THEMSELVES.

"Good actions speak louder than words," so too, does the testimony of many thousands of women during a third of a century speak louder than mere claims not backed by a guarantee of some kind. That is the reason why the proprietors of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription offer $500 reward for women who cannot be cured. Such a remarkable offer is founded on the long record of cures of the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women. If there is an invalid woman, suffering from female weakness, proflapsus, or falling of womb, or from leucorrhoea who has used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription without complete success, the proprietors of that medicine would like to hear from such persons—and it will be to her advantage to write them as they offer, in perfect good faith, a reward of $500 for any case of the above maladies which they cannot cure. No other medicine for women's ills is possessed of the unparalleled curative properties that would warrant its makers in making such an offer.

The sisters of the Good Shepherd, at their convention, "Our Lady of the Woods" at Erie, Ohio, use a great deal of Dr. Pierce's medicine; they say in a recent letter to Dr. Pierce: "We beg to assure you of the great benefit these medicines give our ailing ones. We cannot sufficiently recommend their use." When the druggist says he has something that is as good as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, just tell him, "There's nothing just as good." He says so because he hopes to make a better profit but his own mixtures have not stood the test of long experience and success that Doctor Pierce's medicines have. Then, too, many patent medicines advertised as tonics, contain large quantities of alcohol. Dr. Pierce guarantees that his "Prescription" does not contain a particle of alcohol.

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Advertiser—sent on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps for a copy in paper; 50 stamps in cloth binding. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. It is a good thing to keep Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets in the house. One Pellet is a laxative, two a mild cathartic.

WOMEN OWE THEMSELVES. More men than work—Don't worry about where you are going to get your next suit. COME TO US—WE GUARANTEE TO FIT OR NO SALE—A large range of suitings to select from—All Moncton Make—The Humphrey Clothing Store Opera House Building. Phone 68

Fit-Reform has divorced the idea that cool, comfortable summer suits must necessarily be ill-fitting suits. Fit-Reform hot weather clothes have all the style, and snap, and shapeliness, of the heavier fabrics. Planned by artists—moulded by hand—and held in permanent shape by thousands of tiny stitches. Fit-Reform Specials Double-breasted Blue Serge Coat with English Flannel Trousers to complete the suit. English Flannel Suits. Blue and Black Serges. Genuine Homespuns. $12, $15, $18 and $20. FIT-REFORM PROWSE BROS., CHARLOTTETOWN

The Hallmark of Good Clothes. The reputation of "PROGRESS" CLOTHING has been built solidly on quality. Season after season, "Progress" Clothing has increased in favor, by living up to its recognized reputation. This label means quality, and goes in every genuine "PROGRESS" Suit. Look for it—always. Sold by Leading Clothiers Throughout Canada. Progress Brand Clothing may be had from PROWSE BROS., Charlottetown.

Attractive Woolens —FOR— Spring and Summer As in the past so now we are showingsome of the newest creations in suitings and trouserings that are put on the market. If you favor us with your order you can depend on getting a graceful, comfortable and well finished garment at a moderate cost. D. A. BRUCE, Merchant Tailor, Morris Block.

RETIRING SALE We are retiring from the Dry Goods and Clothing business! We will sell for 10 days, commencing Monday the 16th inst at retail, all dry goods, clothing, furnishings, hats and caps At a Discount from 25 to 50 per cent. No reserve. All goods remaining UNSOLD after that time will be sold at auction. J. B. MacDONALD & Co. 5-16 dw 101