Today's War Map

The military situation in Iraq has taken a turn for the better, and not too soon. The Germans and Italians contemplate moving in that direction the moment the British and Greek resistance is at an end in Crete. The stubborn defence of the garrison in Crete against odds that have become overwhelming, commands the utmost admiration.

The Iraqi usurper and his ministers and the diplomatic representatives of Germany and Italy have fled to the border of Iran across which they are expected to pass. A committee of four, headed by the mayor of Baghdad, has asked for an armistice, which has been granted. Prince Abdal Ilah, the regent who was overthrown by the usurper, and his premier, Nuri Said, were in the environs of Bagdad when last reported it is probable that they have re-established their government. They may be able to command the support of the Iraqi army from this time forward, if not too dependently.
