The Girl Who Had No Chance

By MARION RUBINCAM
THE DINNER, Chapter 87

So they met, after the years and the parting and the emotions each had gone through, in a small kitchen of a cheap uptown apartment, while Ruth's old time chum was putting Tim's baby to bed. Ruth had one hand on the table—a hand white and well cared for these last few months and manured that very day by the much devoted Marie.

And all around were queer, unromantic objects—a line over the stove where small washed-out garments were drying, a clothes horse in a corner with babies' clothes folded and hanging on it, and on the table milk bottles half emptied cups and spoons, soiled dishes, a bowl of salad, a long wooden spoon steaming from its bath in roasts, beet juice, celery and a bottle of olives, a dish towel, and other odds and ends that go with a hurried dinner getting.

Then Ruth slowly held out her hand, and Tim took it. It was a queer way to meet, she thought.

"You're looking like a millionaire," he exclaimed.

"You're looking well, too," she replied.

And she looked at him again. Her first thought was that Tim needed a shave and her second that Langley never looked as though he did. Then she felt ashamed of this. For Tim was just in from work. He had the same broad, boyish grin that first made her adore him, and he was looking at her in frank admiration as he used to.

Myra came back. Tim turned and kissed her—this, too, was something Ruth had been dreading. But it wasn't the lingering kiss of the young lover and it wasn't the habit-trained kiss of a man long married. It was the sweet affectionate caress that was so characteristic of Tim's own sweet and affectionate nature.

You pay the price of Frost Permanency—why not have it

There is no such thing as saving money on "cheap" fence. Should you happen to "save" a little when purchasing ordinary fence, you will lose it again on extra erection and maintenance costs.

In ordinary wire fence the crooked stays, sliding joints and uneven spacing will cost you in lost time and extra repair expense more than enough to pay for Frost Fence permanency.

In Frost Fence every space is uniform, every stay straight, every joint solid as a vise. Frost Fence comes to you in even, neat rolls that unwind easily, stretch on the fence straight and true—and save you time, worry and expense.

In addition, you will save a tidy bit of money on maintenance. The spring-like Frost waved laterals, take up strains that would ruin ordinary fence. The tough, pliable, extra galvanized wire defies all weathers. Frost Fence will not pull out of shape—the Frost Hold-tight Lock won't budge.

When Frost Fence—the permanent fence—costs less, why not have it? Ask the Frost dealer about prices, etc.—or write us direct.

Industrial Bonds

are the best thing in the market to-day, if you want good interest return coupled with probability of appreciation in value.

INDUSTRIALS have not advanced as quickly as Government and Municipal Bonds have. But the condition of business in Canada and the real scarcity of good Industrial issues by larger corporations point to higher prices and lower yields.

THE following, taken from our current list, afford ample scope for individual selection:—

| Bonds | Rate % | Due | Price About | Yield % |
|---|--------|--------------|-------------|---------|
| Stetson Cutler 1st Mtge. Bonds | 7 | July 1, 1942 | 99 | 7.10 |
| Nova Scotia Tramways and Power General Mortgage Bonds | 7 | Apr. 1, 1952 | 100 | 7.10 |
| Wabasso Cotton-Mtge. and Coll. Trust Bonds | 7 | May 1, 1942 | 102 | 6.80 |
| Continental Paper Products 1st Mortgage Bonds | 6 1/2 | Feb. 1, 1943 | 99.50 | 6.50 |
| Bathurst Company 1st Mtge. Bonds | 6 1/2 | June 1, 1941 | 100 | 6.50 |
| Albibi Power and Paper Genl. Mtge. Bonds | 6 | Jan. 2, 1940 | 97.50 | 6.25 |
| Western Power of Canada 1st Mtge. Bonds | 5 | July 1, 1949 | 87.50 | 5.95 |
| Donnacona Paper 1st Mtge. Bonds | 6 | June 1, 1940 | 101 | 5.90 |
