NOTICE

Gentlemen:

We wish to advise you that there are altogether too many small, thin, unfinished hogs being marketed, that is, hogs weighing from 80 to 110 lbs. It is a serious loss to the farmer to kill hogs at those weights, and while some of such hogs are being sold for butcher shop trade, yet the season for this is about over and in the interests of the farmer, packer and the good name of Island Pork, we want to urge you to caution the farmers not to kill their hogs until they will weigh at least 120 lbs., and they must be thick and fat at any weight. In future we must refuse to receive thin hogs even at a reduction of 2c per lb.

Trusting that you may give this matter your attention, keeping in view the best interests of all concerned, we remain

Yours truly

ALKALI IN SHAMPOOS BAD FOR WASHING HAIR

Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else that contains too much alkali, for this is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo for it is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get Mulsified at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful of Mulsified is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens, and takes out every particle of dust, dirt, and dandruff. Beware of imitations. Look for the name Watkins on the package.

In the Shadow Of Dissolution

LONDON, Feb. 9.—The approaching end of the coalition government which has controlled Great Britain's destinies since early in the world war, was seen in the reassembling at noon today of parliament for what is regarded on all sides as its last session.

The sitting was to be opened by the king and queen with the customary picturesque formality. The speech from the throne was expected to include among other matters, bearing on the public welfare an appreciative reference to the success of the Washington Conference.

General interest, however, was less taken with any specific subject which might come before the two houses than with the question of the duration of life of the present parliament and the government's tenure of office.

The newspapers of the party affiliations, except the few definitely supporting the government, for a long time have been cudgeling the administration for its alleged delinquency, each party organ having its own grounds for attack. Accusations of extravagance and failure to grapple with the question of national economy were among the foremost, while others arose from the discontent regarding Ireland and the employment situation and several minor matters.

The extreme uncertainty of the immediate parliamentary future is well upon by the political writers in the morning newspapers, some of whom take the view that some dissatisfaction with the government will be revealed at an early date that its resignation is inevitable.

One writer declared that the government's attitude toward Ulster had so strengthened the supporters of northern Ireland that an almost complete withdrawal of the conservatives from the coalition was possible, forcing Premier Lloyd George to resign.

This extreme view was not general, but the best informed among the commentators admitted there was great unrest and complete uncertainty as to what would happen in the next few days.

Such headlines as "On the Brink" and "Under the Shadow of Dissolution", which top the political columns today are sufficiently indicative of the general belief. In these circumstances, the premier's speech, which is expected today or tomorrow, is awaited with keen interest.

The Times parliamentary correspondent credits Mr. Lloyd George himself with the desire to end the present parliament, but thinks the house of commons may adopt a critical mood and make efforts to prolong the session.

He says:

"The premier will be quite glad of no unforseen troubles arise and will bring the session to an end in the hope of securing, for the next government he desires to see, a more homogeneous if smaller, majority."

On the other hand, the writer foresees the possibility that the house of commons will prolong the session until the time for introduction of the budget, and intimates that India, Egypt, and other questions of foreign policy such as the Cannes supreme council meeting, and its offspring, the proposed economic conference at Genoa, will form topics upon which members will put searching questions to the government.

"The decision of the Washington conference, universally endorsed, as they are, will be all the firmer for a definite expression of parliament's approval", the correspondent adds.

As regards Ireland, there must be at least two bills, one establishing the Irish Free State, and the other conferring indemnities for acts committed under martial law. How much time passage of these measures will take cannot be foreseen, but in view of the present position of Irish affairs the government certainly will do its utmost to hasten them, although if the bills stir up controversy, delay is inevitable.

HOLD-UP MAN GIVEN FIVE YEARS IN "PEN"

WINDSOR, Ont., Feb 7—Five years in Portsmouth penitentiary was the sentence meted out to William Rowan, 23, of Walkerville in Judge Coughlin's court at Sandwich, this afternoon, for highway robbery. Wilfred Adams, of Amherstburg, identified Rowan as the man who held him up, and, at the point of a revolver, compelled him to hand over $3,500. Adams intended using the money, he said, to purchase liquor.

After Ten Years

BY MARION RUBINCAM

REFUSAL

Chapter 69

There was a short silence. Then Paul asked:

"What do you mean?"

"Just that," Patty answered. "I can't see you after tonight."

The engine had stopped purring, the car had settled down to silence. So had the country, which spread around them in a huge level shadow. Once in while a car shot behind them along the main road.

"Why not?" Paul asked.

It was hard to explain.

"Oh—your mother, you mother's friends, if they knew it—my mother thinks it odd because we run off together in your car."

"Then we won't. I'll come to your flat. The only thing is that your mother and sister are always around, that seems rude to say. I like them and all that—only I'd rather see you alone now and then."

He said "now" and "then" as though he practically never saw her alone!

"I know," Patty answered.

"Besides,"—and Paul said it as though it had been his guiding motive all the time—"besides, you never get any fresh air. You are indoors at the Committee, and indoors at your school in the evening, you would lose your health if I didn't drag you out now and then into the fresh air."

"That's true" Patty agreed, glad to have an excuse given her for going out with Paul. Neither of them admitted the fact that they went off together like this because they wanted the world to themselves.

"Well, then!" said Paul, as though he had met and conquered every argument. But this brought Patty back to the point.

"I can't see you again—really Paul. Your mother—"

"Well?"

"I overheard her talking to some of the Committee members the other day. She's cross because you are working—and is trying to find out what has made you want to work—"

"I'll tell her the example of a girl who wasn't afraid to go out and support her family!" Paul cut in viciously.

"That won't help—not with your mother. She's not—democratic."

Paul laughed at this mild way of stating it. Patty went on.

"She thinks it's a sudden enthusiasm on your part that you'll get over. She says she's going to take you to Europe with her, where you'll get over this American idea that every man should know a trade, or else get Miss MacKeen to talk to you and bring you to a more sensible point of view."

Paul laughed.

"Meaning her point of view," he said. "Don't I know what she'll do then! If her friends can't help her out, she'll get very ill, and then her doctor will order her to Southern France, and she'll make me go along, and as she'll ill, I won't dare refuse and—"

Patty had heard this very thing talked over. Mrs. Darlington had a tiny villa on the Riviera, which she opened every two years. Patty had heard her plan a house party there. Mrs. MacKeen, a rare worker at the Committee had consented to be one of the party and her daughter, the lovely dark-eyed girl Patty saw sometimes and envied, was to go along.

It was so obvious. Patty could see it from the bits she gathered in the talk of the workers. Mrs. Darlington would get ill, her doctor would obligingly order her away, Paul could not refuse to attend an ailing mother, so much even he saw and admitted.

They would sail, the charming little house would be opened—and what as more natural than to ask Mrs. MacKeen and her daughter for a month or so, since these good fiends are also traveling abroad. Then there would be the charming girl, and Paul isolated from his other friends, thrown with her to bathe in the marvellous surf, to dance, at the casinos, to ride and walk with—why in such beautiful and romantic surroundings, and engagement would be sure to result—it would be the only natural thing!

But she could not tell Paul this. Paul was still laughing.

"If she's ill I'd have to go, but I'll make sure it isn't just a little game of her. As for Miriam MacKeen—"

"Dont' you see?" Patty asked desperately, "she thinks it's all right now. She doesn't know where you go when you take your car out in the evenings. She thinks it isn't a girl—but when she finds out that I'm the reason she'll be furious. She'll not let you see me, don't you understand—I mustn't see you again!"

"Oh yes, you must!" Paul turned in th car and faced her. He was leaning towards her, very near her.

Tomorrow—The Eternal Passion

BOLSHEVISTS WILL CUT

MOSCOW, Feb. 9.—Special instructions have been issued to the Russian Soviet delegates to the Genoa conference that long hair should be trimmed and leather jackets and top boots discarded and that those in the party should dress in a dignified manner. All the delegates are buying new clothes in order to present a good appearance and to show the world as one of them expressed it, that the Bolsheviki are like "ordinary people."

Money has also been provided for adding to the stock of clothes at Genoa.

The Soviet delegation is preparing to leave Russia by way of the Black Sea, going direct to Genoa, in order to insure against attacks to which it might be subject if the overland route was taken.

More secrecy is being observed concerning the port of embarkation and accompanying the delegation will be a number of men and women members of the Cheka in disguise.

SAVED HER FROM AN OPERATION

So Thinks Mrs. Tracey of Ontario, Regarding Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Knightington, Ontario.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at the change of life for troubles that women often have at that time. I had not been well for a year and was not really able to do my work. A friend who had taken the Vegetable Compound herself recommended it to me and I think its use saved me from an operation. I highly recommend it to all women who have troubles like mine, and am willing for you to use my testimonial."—Mrs. Daniel J. Tracey, Knightington, Ontario.

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But the more common ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same.

When disturbing symptoms first appear take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles.

WEAK, NERVOUS PEOPLE NEED BITRO-PHOSPHATE

Remarkable Substance Discovered by French Scientist Closely Resembles Natural Elements Found in Nerve Cells of Human Body.

Increases Weight, Strength and Energy in Two Weeks' Time in Many Instances.

New York—Physicians and druggists all over the country have been intensely interested in reports concerning the nerve and strength-building properties of Bitro-Phosphate, discovered by the French scientist, Pelouz, and later so successfully used and introduced to the medical world by Professor Robin, of the Academy of Medicine, Paris.

It is said that the constituent elements of Bitro-Phosphate are the nearest in composition to the materials naturally found in the nerve cells of the human body of any known substance, and that it furnishes an immediate supply of food and energy to the nervous system as soon as it is taken.

Frederick Kolle, M. D., Editor of New York Physicians' "Who's Who," says: "Bitro-Phosphate should be prescribed by every doctor and used in every hospital to increase strength and nerve force and to enrich the blood.

Joseph D. Harrigan, former Visiting Specialist to North Eastern Dispensatory, says: "Let those who are nervous, thin, weak, or run down take a natural, unadulterated substance such as Bitro-Phosphate, and you will soon see some astonishing results in the increase of nerve energy, strength of body and mind and power of endurance."

Those who are inclined toward nervousness, thinness, weakness, nervous debility, sleeplessness etc., will greatly appreciate the opportunity to secure such certain relief and aid as is afforded by this discovery. In order that the public may always be saved from deception, it has been arranged that the laboratories packaging Bitro-Phosphate will sell it under no other name in this country, and nothing else should be accepted.

Very complete information relating to its use is contained in every package, so that it may be understood and correctly applied by anyone. So certain is it to assist those who are nervous to regain their health and vitality that the manufacturers guarantee to refund its cost to any who are dissatisfied after using it.

Genuine Bitro-Phosphate can be obtained from Hughes' Drug Co., Ltd., and all reliable druggists.
